VOL. IX—NO. 2565. NEW-YORK, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1859. PRICE TWO CENTS.

CONGRESS.

Both Houses Engrossed with the Slavery Agitation.

Speeches of Messrs. Trumbull, Davis, Clay and Wilson, in the Senate.

Messrs. Davis, of Mississippi, and Corwin and Cox, of Ohio, in the House.

NO BALLOT FOR SPEAKER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 8.

The debate in Congress continues to draw crowded galleries, which indulge in free and unlimited applause, but no progress is made towards an organization.

Mr. CORWIN to-day delivered an amusing, though conservative, speech, in which he repudiates Mr. SEWARD as a Republican leader. His complimentary remarks upon Virginia and South Carolina were listened to with apparent pleasure by Senators MASON and CHESNUT, who had entered the House at the moment, and remained standing just in the rear of the speaker. His speech was not regarded by Republicans as well-timed, and some were uncharitable enough to pronounce it a bid for the Speakership.

Mr. COX, of Ohio, took issue with his colleague, as to the position of the Republican party in their State, and a severe fire was kept up till a late hour, much to the gratification of the galleriec, where, in the meantime, a fight occurred between a Virginian and an advocate of SEWARD'S, without, however, interrupting the current of debate on the floor below.

So slight is the prospect for an early organization, that Post-office certificates were offered in market to-day at ninety-four cents.

Senators continue to debate Mr. MASON'S resolution with much feeling.

Senator TRUMBULL to-day also denounced Mr. SEWARD as the leader of the Republican Party. He recognized no leader. In reply to inquiries he said that the admission of a new State would not be opposed by him in consequence of its having a constitution sanctioning Slavery. He regarded Slavery as existing in this District by the force of local laws, and he would never interfere with the relation of master and slave where it existed.

Mr. TRUMBULL'S speech was as candid as it was conservative and eloquent.

The First Comptroller of the Treasury has refused to approve the allowance to Missouri of four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as a percentage on land sales as ascertained by the General Land Office This fund was looked to for the means wherewith to pay the interest shortly due on the Missouri Bonds.

Q.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 8.

Mr. SLIDELL, of Louisiana, (Dem.,) gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill making an appropriation to facilitate negotiations for the acquisition of Cuba.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, (Dem.,) gave similar notice of a Homestead bill.

Several other notices were given, including one for the construction of a railroad in Pennsylvania-avenue, Washington.

Mr. MASON'S resolution came up, when Mr. TRUMBULL, of Illinois, (Rep.,) resumed his remarks, showing the importance of an inquiry relative to the sacking of the arsenal at Liberty, Mo. The seizure of an arsenal recently is regarded as a matter of great importance, yet the President, in his message, never alluded to the seizure of the arsenal in Missouri. A resolution was adopted in March, 1856, calling on the President for all the information in the Departments relative to the affairs of Kansas, yet the report of Capt. LEONARD has never been sent to the Senate. He proceeded, in reply to an inquiry of Mr. YULEE, to lay down the principles of the Republican Party, reading their platform, and defending the doctrines therein contained.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, (Dem.,) inquired if the Constitution gave power to establish Slavery there?

Mr. TRUMBULL replied it was a Constitution of freedom and not Slavery; the word slave don't occur in it.

Mr. YULEE, of Florida, (Dem.,) stated that it appeared then that the whole object of the Republican Party was to exclude Slavery from the Territories. He desired to know whether the exclusion did not apply to the District of Columbia, and all the forts and arsenals which were under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government? How was it in the new States of the Union? For a logical sequence his argument would be that slaves are now illegally held in Louisiana and Missouri, and every other new State. He wanted light on these matters for it was a serious question. The doctrines of the Republican Party plant the seeds of revolution. That is a platform on which it is impossible for the country to stand. The Trojan horse has been introduced, out of which will issue armed enemies to the existence of the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL thought the gentlemen entirely mistaken as to the principles and views of the Republicans. He would endeavor to enlighten them in a calm and candid manner. He did not like to hear them use the word South in this matter. Not more than one-twentieth of the people South are slaveholders, and that class should not arrogate to themselves that they are the South. The exclusion of Slavery from the Territories operates on all alike. Northern men will have no more right to carry slaves there than Southern men. The Republican Party had its origin in the question of Slavery in the Territories. This territorial question was not settled; and the Democratic Party unsettled it. He went on to allude to the term Black Republican, which had been used.

Mr. YULEE said the Republican name having been consecrated by the fathers of the country, a sectional party had not the right to appropriate it without some qualification. He would not call them "Black," but would leave it to themselves to supply the designation.

Mr. TRUMBULL replied they call themselves Republicans because they advocate the principles of JEFFERSON. If his party had made any departure from those principles he would condemn such departure. The fathers of the old Republican Party were their models, from whom their principles were taken. The very words in their platform, to which the Senator from Florida objected, were written by the hand of JEFFERSON.

Mr. YULEE—To create and not destroy free government.

Mr. TRUMBULL—Yes; and we perpetuate free government by maintaining the principles we advocate. The other party call themselves Democrats, when their legislation is all shaped for the interests of the slaveholding aristocracy, comprising only one out of sixty of the inhabitants of the United States.

Mr. CLAY, of Alabama, (Dem.)—Do you recognize the right to reclaim fugitive slaves in the Territories?

Mr. TRUMBULL—I do, under the act of Congress, but not under the Fugitive Slave law, unless it is made applicable.

Mr. CLAY—How do you reconcile the obligation in your platform to give all men freedom, with the counterveiling right to reclaim fugitive slaves?

Mr. TRUMBULL—That obligation is merely a repetition of the doctrine enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. Our fathers did not undertake to carry out their principles perfectly, as every Government is an encroachment more or less upon the natural rights of man. They were men who had fled from the despotism of the Old World, and enunciated the general principles of carrying them out as far as circumstances permitted.

Mr. CLAY—Explain how you can reconcile, as consistent with the personal integrity of the framers of the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution, their holding them as slaves, retaining them as slaves, and distributing them by their last will and testament among their descendants, with the declaration that all men are entitled to life and liberty.

Mr. TRUMBULL—Under the circumstances they did not regard it as a crime to hold slaves.

Mr. CLAY—Are there any circumstances under which crime can be justified, excused or tolerated?

Mr. TRUMBULL—I don't call it a crime in the citizens of the South to hold slaves.

Mr. CLAY—Is Polygamy a crime? Your platform classes Slavery and Polygamy together.

Mr. TRUMBULL—It is a crime under some circumstances. I take it that it is not a crime in Turkey.

Mr. CLAY, (interrupting)—I thank you for that concession in this Christian country.

Mr. TRUMBULL—We regard it as a crime, but other nations don't regard it so. I don't regard holding slaves as a crime, as they are often held in the Southern States. I think it is a wrong; but it is better to endure a wrong than undertake to right it by a greater crime and greater evil.

Mr. CLAY—Then I understand him that right and wrong are merely conventional, and depend on the laws and moral sentiment of society.

Mr. TRUMBULL—Not entirely, although many things are criminal or innocent, according to circumstances When we speak of crime we mean violation of the laws of the land. There were no laws against polygamy in Turkey or against Slavery in the South. This thing of holding persons in slavery depends on the circumstances of the people who have slaves. I hold it as an evil, but in my judgment it is not a crime in every instance. I have never so regarded it. I do not believe Slavery illegal in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PUGH, of Ohio, (Dem.,) asked if he spoke for his party or for himself alone.

Mr. TRUMBULL said he spoke for himself, and explained the principles of the Republican Party as understood by the people of the Northwest, who are a conservative, Union-loving and law-abiding people.

Mr. PUGH asked if Mr. CHASE, of Ohio, was an exponent of the principles of the Republican Party.

Mr. TRUMBULL replied that the platform was the only authorized source whence to decide their principles. There might be as much difference between the sentiments of different Republicans on some points, as between Mr. PUGH and the rest of the Democratic party on the question of Squatter Sovereignty, although he did not think there was. This was the creed of thirteen hundred thousand men, and no doubt some difference existed in their opinions on certain points. He maintained that neither Congress nor the Territorial Legislature had power to create Slavery in a Territory, and took strong ground in favor of colonizing, under the fostering care of the Government, the free colored population of the United States, and those who may hereafter become free by the voluntary act of States or individuals, on some place or territory not too remote, until they shall become enabled to form a Government for themselves. He expressed the wish that this should become the settled policy of the Republican Party. He read from the writings of JEFFERSON and a speech of HENRY CLAY, bearing on that subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, (Dem.,) referred to the fact that Mr. TRUMBULL had not only introduced an amendment to embarrass the resolution, but made a long speech on the general subject of Slavery at the time when the importance of speedy action was apparent to everybody. Mr. TRUMBULL complains that the President did not send the information he wanted; but why did he not call for it again? It is not true that a large number of arms were taken at Liberty or that a large number of them were kept. Only enough were taken to arm about one hundred men and three light pieces of field artillery. They were not kept two weeks, and when they were returned the whole amount of expense for repairs and losses was only $400. This is the transaction held up as a parallel to the recent foray into the State of Virginia. The Senator had said more lives were lost in consequence of taking the arsenal at Liberty than at Harper's Ferry. He did not know as these arms were ever used. The Department had no information that they were. They were taken for the purpose of preserving order and to harm no one. Neither had any one engaged in that transaction been rewarded with a Federal office on account of the part he took therein. It was becoming in the Governor of Pennsylvania to offer assistance to the Governor of Virginia, and equally becoming in Mr. WISE to decline it.

Mr. MASON, of Virginia, (Dem.)—There was no offer made, and, of course, it could not have been declined.

Mr. DAVIS—I saw it so stated in the newspapers.

Mr. BIGLER, of Pennsylvania, (Dem.,) said Gov. WISE addressed the Governor of Pennsylvania on the subject, but the letter was not received in time for a prompt reply. That reply was all that could be desired by Virginia, showing that no countenance would be given by Pennsylvania to any encroachments on the rights of a sister State.

Mr. MASON stated that Gov. WISE'S letter to the Governors of Ohio and Pennsylvania called for no aid whatever, but mentioned that he had information that combinations of armed men were forming in those States for the purpose of making an incursion into Virginia, either to rescue BROWN or to secure hostages in his place. Whether those combinations were really formed or not, Mr. MASON did not know.

Mr. DAVIS could see nothing humiliating in the Governor of Virginia calling on the Governors of Ohio and Pennsylvania to take care of lawless men within their limits. He believed that a conspiracy had been formed extending not only through the United States but England. Money had been contributed and a military leader sent here from England to take command. The insurrection was foretold in England long before it occurred here. FORBES received his first funds in England, and expected further aid here, but when it was not forthcoming he denounced his associates. The most odious feature in the whole transaction was that we find lurking a sordid commercial purpose to disturb industry in the South and raise the price of cotton.

Mr. MASON appealed to both sides of the Senate to let a vote be taken without further debate. If the amendment should be adopted he would wash his hands of the whole matter, being satisfied that it could result in no good.

Mr. WILSON, of Mass., (Rep.,) said some remarks made the other day demanded a reply, but he had no wish to embarrass the investigation. He saw no particular emergency requiring haste. Cotton and negroes commanded a good price, and this was an evident attempt to get up a panic and excitement for the purpose of calling out gentlemen at the North, of the Fifth avenue stripe, who have long purses, and make large contributions. He proceeded to reply to Mr. IVERSON'S remarks respecting public sentiment in the North, and declared that freedom of speech did not exist in the South, alluding to several cases where people had been expelled or mobbed for expressing obnoxious sentiments. During his remarks a colloquy occurred, in which Mr. IVERSON said they would tar and feather every one in the South who preached sedition. [Applause in the galleries.]

Messrs. BROWN, of Mississippi, (Dem.,) and BRAGG, of North Carolina, (Dem.,) participated in the colloquy.

Mr. WILSON had no defence to make of the action of the Massachusetts Senate, and spoke in severe terms of Gov. WISE, whose whole life, he said, had been one of agitation. He believed that an investigation would show that he (WISE) and his confederates had formed a plan, in case FREMONT was elected President, to seize the City of Washington and Harper's Ferry, the very act for which he has hung BROWN He alluded to the New-York Herald as furnishing brains for the Democratic Party, and containing materials from which editorials were rehashed in Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, (Dem.,) obtained the floor, but the hour being late, the Senate then adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House was opened with prayer.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, (Dem.,) rose to make a speech.

A running discussion ensued on the pending proposition whether it was relevant to make speeches, as the previous question had heretofore been demanded and seconded, to cut off discussion on Mr. CLARK'S resolution, and Mr. GILMER'S substitute.

The Clerk subsequently rose to put the question, as had been proposed, whether it was competent for him to decide questions of order, pending the election of a Speaker.

Mr. MILLSON, of Virginia, (Dem.,) objected to a private citizen, elected by a former House as its subordinate officer, presiding over this body.

Mr. GROW, of Pennsylvania, (Rep.,) agreed with Mr. MILLSON, and would not favor a violation of the express law of Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD, of Tennessee, (Op.,) differed from both these gentlemen.

The points of order were then withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, was in favor of a continuation of harmony. He believed the Government wanted saving. He was not a Democrat per se, and would make as many sacrifices as any man to preserve the Union. But notwithstanding his devotion to the Union, there are evils greater than the Union itself. He insisted on a strict observance of the Constitution in order to secure every section of the country its just equality and rights. It was the duty of all conservative and patriotic men to rally to the support of the Democracy, the only national party, to pu down the Abolition spirit. There was, notwithstanding what had been said to the contrary, great cause of alarm to the country. We should act instantly, or it will be altogether too late. He quoted from the speeches of Mr. SEWARD to show that dangerous sentiments were avowed to distract the country, and accomplish the overthrow of the South. To say that the labor of the two sections was conflicting and irreconcilable, was a declaration of war, and hence the South were alarmed, and look to their defence. He earnestly appealed to all patriots to put down treasonable designs. In alluding to remarks heretofore made by Republicans, he said that armed men had been sent to the South to kill their people, and deprive them of their property. Could the South be patient under these circumstances, and could they be blamed for taking means for their defence? We of the South want peace. Let the North stand by the compact of our fathers. He said SEWARD is a traitor and deserves the gallows. [Applause on the Southern side.] Virginia has hung the traitor BROWN, and if they get hold of SEWARD they will hang him. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, (Independent) said that, occupying a perfectly independent position, he was at liberty to vote on all questions according to his sense of duty to his country. He was opposed to all unnecessary agitation of the subject of Slavery, and did not wish to discuss it unless it came before them in a legitimate way. This wicked Administration countenanced every act of violence and fraud on the people of Kansas, and brought into Congress a Constitution fraudulent from the beginning to the end, and which would not stand the test of examination. His friend (Mr. SHERMAN) here stood nobly firm for the rights of the people against the Government, standing up for law, order, concord and peace, and for this the gentleman should have his vote so long as there was any probability of his election. He knew the gentleman was a friend to protection of domestic industry, and would so organize the Committees as would secure the fair consideration of that question. He was a man of just temper and mind, and incapable of perverting the rules into an instrument of despotism. An objection has been urged that Mr. SHERMAN signed the recommendation of HELPER'S book. He (MORRIS) did not sign nor had he read the book. So far as he understood, it was written by a native of a Southern State. It was almost exclusively addressed to Southern men, and showed the experience of Southern men as to the value of Southern labor. Gentlemen magnify the book and make it a formidable engine of mischief to the peace of this country. Had not his friend declared that he was against that book, so far as it contemplated an infringement on the constitutional rights of the South? What had the House to do with HELPER'S book? Were they as a college of Jesuits to expunge the literature of the book; and were they to act as censors of every incendiary work? It was a most extraordinary proceeding, and lifted HELPER into a consequence he never dreamed of obtaining. Who repealed the Missouri Compromise, and broke the bonds of peace? The Democratic Party. Who got up the Kansas-Nebraska bill? The Democratic Party. Who refused to carry out the provisions of the Kansas bill, deluding Kansas by saying she should have a free expression of her will, and then denying it? The Democratic Party. Who brought the Slavery question here? The Democratic Party. And yet gentlemen were to sit in this Hall and hear the whole North accused of acts of conspiracy against the Southern States. Was it fair, was it honorable and fair-dealing that the proceedings of small bodies in the North should be taken as indices of all those living in that section? His constituents were eminently loyal, and he insisted they should not be made particeps criminis, and it was libel and calumny to hold them and the North responsible for the actions of a band of bad men. It might as reasonably be charged that the whole South was responsible for the ordinance passed by South Carolina, nullifying the laws of the United States, and providing for armed resistance. The man who was then President was a citizen of Tennessee, and he, in dealing with that subject, met a response not only from the East and West, but from the South. The proceedings of the Nashville Convention, too, fell dead on the loyal heart of the South. He would never despair of making the Constitution and the Union perpetual, and hoped that they would all live together as a band of brothers. But they never could live peaceably as long as gentlemen come into this House and insist on misrepresentations, and involve innocent people in the acts of criminals.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, (Dem.,) in reply to Mr. MORRIS, said that such a charge as the gentleman mentioned had never been made by the South on the entire people of the North. He knew there were men in the North as true to the Constitution as in the South. But when it was said that in the North there was no sympathy for JOHN BROWN, it was a libel. The papers of the North were full of demonstrations of sympathy, and some were in mourning for BROWN. Mr. GREELEY, a prominent organ of the Republican Party, said in his paper, that in future time BROWN'S name will be held in glory and honor. So far as he knew the sentiments of those he represented, he but expressed his deliberate conviction when he said that the success of a purely sectional party would virtually be a dissolution of the Union. If the Republican Party could be defeated, the Union would be preserved. But if such a party were to succeed, the sooner the Union is dissolved the better. The South were on the defensive, and if they could not get their rights in the Union, and under the Constitution, they were prepared to have their rights out of it.

Mr. CORWIN, of Ohio, (Republican,) suggested that the House should take the course resorted to in the House when the New-Jersey Contested Election case prevented prompt organization. On that occasion the venerable JOHN QUINCY ADAMS was elected as Chairman until a Speaker was elected. It had been his fortune to witness here every one of the crises to which reference had been made in the debate. He was here during the nullification times and in 1850. If gentlemen could now summon to their aid the calm and wise course which animated gentlemen in those times, all unpleasant feelings would be removed. [Applause.] He had heard with infinite pain the repeated threats that, if the Republican Party were successful in the Presidential election the South would be willing to encounter the fatal consequences of a dissolution of the Union.

Mr. LAMAR, of Mississippi, (Democrat)—Did not Ex-President FILLMORE make that very threat.

Mr. CORWIN replied that he dared say that such an assertion was made prior to Mr. FILLMORE'S election as Vice-President. He did express, in a formal manner, every opinion held by the Republican Party at this day; but it was found, when he succeeded to the Presidency, that he so administered the Government as to secure the approbation of every conservative man North and South for his impartiality. So would it happen to every man who comes into the Presidency. No matter what speculations he may have previously expressed, he will execute his constitutional powers. He did not think it fair to judge the Republican Party by what Mr. SEWARD or any other man has said. He had never read the speech of that Senator which was so repeatedly quoted from. There were hundreds of thousands of men who vote with the Republicans who had never read it, for there were men in that party who do not consider themselves worshippers of any idol. As to the charge that Mr. SEWARD was implicated in the conduct of JOHN BROWN, Mr. CORWIN said no man could be convicted on such questionable testimony as was sought to be produced. He thought that this mode of criminating men ought to be put away. He doubted not if they would trace the history of our country they would all find something they would be willing to forget. If every man would examine himself, he would find something to regret, and it is so of parties and Governments. In the course of his remarks, he said the principles of the Republicans were those of the framers of our Constitution, and for this he held himself responsible, but only as a lawyer. [Laughter.] He differed from some men who voted with that party. As to HELPER'S book, he did not think it would change the opinion of a single man, woman or child on the face of the earth.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio, (Rep.,) here explained, that when certain members signed their names, recommending the circulation of the book so often referred to, its compilation was not completed. It was to be made up of statistics from HELPER'S book and quotations from the fathers of the Republic. The superintendence of the book was in the hands of gentlemen in whom they had confidence.

Mr. CORWIN resumed, and in the course of his remarks said that the South were entitled to a good law relative to fugitives, and such was his belief concerning the people of Ohio. His speech was somewhat discursive, and much that he said kept the House in exceeding good humor. He thought there was no occasion to quarrel.

Mr. COX, of Ohio, (Dem.,) argued that the doctrines of the Republicans of Ohio were subversive of the Constitution. Cut off the Western Reserve and it would be as strongly Democratic as any State in the Union. He said that Mr. CORWIN was supporting men and a platform which had no affinity with the Fugitive Slave law, the perpetuity of the Union, or the sanctity of the Federal compact. He asked Mr. SHERMAN whether he believed in the constitutionality of the Fugitive Slave law.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, (Rep.,) declined, as he did the other day, to reply to any interrogatories, and referred to his public record for the last four years. He did not expect the support of gentlemen on that side of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. COX said that Mr. SHERMAN had an opportunity to manifest his love for the Free States when the Oregon bill came up, but he went out of the door so fast that you might have sat on his coat tail. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN said he was engaged with a Special Committee at the time.

Mr. COX replied that all the members of the Special Committee, with the exception of Mr. SHERMAN, voted, and concluded by exposing what he called the mosaic of the Republican Party in Ohio.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

NEW-YORK BOARD OF CURRENCY.—Hon. GEO. OPDYKE presided at the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Currency, which was held on Tuesday evening in the Mercantile Library Room. Mr. JOHN V. YATMAN presented to the Board two Colonial notes, of two dollars each, of the currency issued to circulate as Money in the Colony of Maryland, prior to the Revolution. He also presented a copy of a letter relative to the Currency, written by Gen. WASHINGTON. A discussion followed on the theories which are promulgated by some writers, that the movements of paper money and bank debts are to be classed with the operations of the credit system, and do not belong to the practical working of the great measure of prices. Mr. OPDYKE remarked that such theories arose from a superficial examination of the phenomena of wealth. Mr. LYMAN concurred in this opinion, and Mr. J. SMITH HOMANS alluded to the circulation of small gold coins, as a measure tending to promote the soundness of the currency through the increase of the precious metals in the hands of the people, and to the effort which is about to be made in England in this direction, by means of small gold coins. Mr. LYMAN remarked that our gold dollar had proved a failure; it is too small to be popular for general circulation. It should have been made annular, so that the pieces could have been kept in quantity upon strings. A gold coin made in this way would be of general utility, and popular with the people. After the great increase of paper currency among the European nations had been referred to, Mr. LAWRENCE referred to the destination of the gold exported from this country, as a matter for inquiry. The Chairman and Messrs. HOMANS, LYMAN and YATMAN, joined in the discussion. The general conclusion was, that the great volume of gold is going to the Continent of Europe, and displacing silver for Asia. Allusion was made to a growing demand for silver coin for export, in this country; to the production of silver in Arizona and California; the great abundance of quicksilver in California; the supply of foreign coin brought in by European immigrants, and the increased consumption of gold in the arts. The increase of gold, it was generally concluded, is not having as great an influence upon prices, from increase of the currency, as had been predicted in some quarters.

THE HIGH BRIDGE OVER THE CROTON RIVER TO BE REPLACED.—The Special Committee of the Westchester Board of Supervisors, to whom was submitted the petition of A. K. ROFFMAN and others, praying for a new High Bridge across the CrotonRiver in place of the High Bridge, submitted their report on the 29th ult. They found on examination that the southerly wing of the easterly abutment of the bridge had disappeared, leaving a huge gap directly in front of one side of it, rendering one-half of the bridge entirely impassable. They also found that the abutment lately built had split from the bottom to the top. For the following reasons they deemed it best to comply with the prayer of the petitioners: First—Because it will cost a large sum of money to repair and keep in repair the present bridge, which will be saved if a new one is built. Second—A dangerous road will be entirely avoided, and dangerous accidents prevented. Third—A direct road, connecting with the new bridge, will bring the villages of Sing Sing and Croton into close connection, greatly to the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants of those localities. Resolutions were adopted directing that the sum of $4,000 should be assessed upon the County of Westchester to meet the expense of the structure, and if this were not sufficient that the people of the towns of Ossining and Cortlandt should raise the balance by subscription or otherwise. The report and resolutions were adopted.

KAPPNER'S CHESS TOURNAY.—The Chess tournament now in progress at the Morphy Chess and Billiard-rooms, corner of Broadway and Fourth-street, where the match between MORPHY and THOMPSON was played last Summer, will not be completed in less than a month. It was commenced last Monday. The match is between thirty-two players, whose names—an incorrect list of which has appeared in other papers—are given below, in the order in which the players are pitted against each other:

Stanley vs. Johnston.	O'Neil vs. Ballantine.
Rulien vs. Paterson.	Taber vs. Delmar.
Arth. Napoleon vs. Harned.	Michaelis vs. Mark.
Brisbane vs. Hazeltine.	Leonard vs. Lecour.
Branzinger vs. Doyle.	Isaacs vs. J. K. Doolittle.
Mildeberger vs. McLean.	Ottolengin vs. Kersheedt.
A. Doolittle vs. Caldwell.	Heilbuth vs. Higgins.
Blum vs. McRae.	Knox vs. O'Connor.

By the terms of the match, the opponent of each player is selected by drawing lots, and the tournament is divided into five sections, in the first of which the thirty-two are matched in sixteen separate games; then in the second section the sixteen winners of two games in the first are matched: in the third, the number of players, chosen by the same standard, is narrowed down to eight; in the fourth, to four; and in the fifth, to two. He who wins three games in the last section becomes entitled to the prize offered by the proprietors of the chessrooms, Messrs. KAPPNER & KLATZL—a pretty set of chessmen of boxwood and ebony and a board of rosewood and satinwood, which are on exhibition at the rooms. The contestants will play every day and evening till the match is decided.

MORE PHYSICIANS FOR THE FLOATING HOSPITAL.—The Quarantine Commissioners have appointed Mr. WM. H. THOMSON an assistant-physician to Dr. HARRIS, on board the Floating Hospital lying off Quarantine. The physicians' salaries now to be paid by the Commissioners of Emigration for the Quarantine Hospitals, amount to about $12,200 per annum. There are, at present, five persons reported sick on board. The Commissioners have also to pay for similar services at Blackwell's and Ward's Island.

FAIR OF THE J. T. HOPPER HOME.—A Fair and entertainment, for the benefit of the Women's Home for discharged female prisoners, was opened on Thursday evening, at Clinton Hall, in Astor-place, and will continue day and evening, until Saturday.

SUDDEN DEATH.—WM. B. MCNEILL died suddenly yesterday morning while sitting in the ferry-house foot of Twenty-third-street, East River. His body was conveyed to the Bellevue Hospital, where an inquest by Coroner SCHIRMER revealed the fact that death was caused by disease of the heart.

FALL FROM ALOFT.—JAMES STEPHENSON, a seaman, at work aloft on board of the ship Underwriter, at Pier No. 45, East River, yesterday fell from the topgallant-yard to the deck, and sustained severe injuries. He was carried to the New-York Hospital.

ILLEGAL VOTING.

Justice STEERS, at the Essex Market Police Court, had several persons before him charged with illegal voting at the Municipal election. Charles Harrison, a sailor in the United States Navy, and belonging to the North Carolina, having rowed one of the officers across the river, was requested to vote in the Tenth District, and was informed that he had a right to do so. On attempting to cast his ballot he was arrested and fully committed to answer in default of $500 bail. Daniel Weeks, a seaman, residing in the Eleventh District of the Seventh Ward, who has voted for the last seven or eight years, had his vote challenged, whereupon he produced his "Protection," certifying that he was a citizen. This he regarded as sufficient. The Chairman of the Board of Inspectors exonerated Weeks from any criminal intent, and he was admitted to bail. John M. Brown, who was charged with stuffing a ballot-box in the Fourteenth Ward, after a full investigation was honorably discharged.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

THE BOARD OF COUNCILMEN.

ELECTION OF FIRE DEPARTMENT ENGINEERS—CITY EXPENDITURES.

In the Board of Councilmen last evening, the report of the Committee on Fire Department, with an ordinance providing for the election of an additional Assistant Engineer for the Fire Department, and rules and regulations for conducting future elections for Chief and Assistant Engineers, was called up and made special order for next Monday night.

A communication was received from the Comptroller, giving a summary of expenditures on City account, and also upon the several Trust and Special accounts from Jan. 1, 1859 to Nov. 30th ult., amounting in the aggregate to $16,362,396 44. After the transaction of some routine business, the Board adjourned to Monday next.

CITY CANVASSERS.

The Board of Aldermen organized as a Board of City Canvassers at 12 M., yesterday. Alderman BOOLE was appointed Chairman. The Board sat till 5 P. M. The returns from the Eleventh Aldermanic District, (Twentieth Ward,) with the exception of the vote for school officers in the Sixth District, and rom the Seventeenth Aldermanic District (Twelfth Ward) were canvassed, and the returns from the Fourteenth Aldermanic District (Eighteenth Ward) were taken up. The Board adjourned to 10 A. M., to-day.

BROOKLYN FERRY FARES.

Messrs. BOOLE, STARR and DARRAGH, the Committee of New-York Aldermen, had an informal meeting with Aldermen DAYTON, TAYLOR and GREEN, of Brooklyn, yesterday, to confer on the proposed reduction of ferry fares between this City and Bloooklyn. Nothing could be done, however, as the services of the New-York Aldermen were required in the Board of Canvassers.

Routes of Oriental Commerce.

LECTURE BY CAPT. W. T. LYNCH BEFORE THE KANE MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

At the Cooper Institute, last evening, an audience not numerous but attentive, listened to the second lecture in the course before the Kane Monument Association, delivered by Capt. W. T. LYNCH U. S. N.

The lecturer commenced by noting the gradual discovery of the science of navigation and the development of the wealth of the East, whose commerce has been the bone of contention of all nations from the time of the Arabian caravan, spoken of in Genesis as coming from Judea, to the present day, when no less than two steamships, longer than the renowned Great Eastern, have been built at Liverpool for the Oriental Steamship Company, whose annual revenue is $7,500,000. He detailed the various routes taken by Phœnicians, without whose commerce the literature of Greece would probably have never been spread over the world; by ALEXANDER, in excavating the canal from the Red Sea to the banks of the Nile, for the purpose of taking goods to Alexandria wholly by water; by the Persians, through the Indus to the Caspian Sea; by the Romans, through Mesopotamia, Syria and Palestine to the Eastern ports of the Mediterranean; by Solomon, in founding Palmyra, the city in the desert; and by Hipolytus, the commander of an Egyptian vessel, who allowed himself to be swept across the Arabian sea by the "monsoons," striking the west coast of India. He dilated upon the commercial importance of China, and the struggles between England and Russia to secure that vast and valuable trade. Our sympathies should be with England, for her liberality in allowing others to participate in the benefits of her commercial treaties, but American enterprise in that quarter of the world should at the same time be spurred on. He enlarged upon the untold wealth and all-powerful commercial importance of India as well as of China, and noticed en passant the significant fact that before long the route to the Pacific, from the Atlantic ports, might be through the Missouri River, and the new wagon-road to the Columbia River, (thus bringing us perhaps in closer communication with China than by any other route.) How long would it be before commerce would ascend the great streams of China instead of descending them? While noticing the new telegraphic enterprise from Aden across the Red Sea, and the projected railroad facilities for reaching India, he asked why there could not be explored a direct route from Jaffa, in the Mediterranean, to Grande, on the Persian Gulf? Why should we stop for England to fight France on the Egyptian Canal, or France fight England on a Syrian railway? Commerce might come either through the valley of the Euphrates, by the way of the Valley el Ahabak, or directly from the Persian Gulf to the southeast of the Dead Sea. He had heard of the probability of Georgia pine supplying the place of the cedars of Lebanon, of the fact of an American omnibus running in the streets of Beyrout, of the improving aspect of affairs at Jerusalem, of the increasing commercial importance of Jaffa. Why should not Palestine, the centre of Europe, Asia and Africa, be the commercial centre of the world, the part of a route to India, and the commercial necessity for those ends be the means of the fulfillment of God's prophecy in Isaiah—for the restoration of the Jews?

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

BOAT SWAMPED—ONE MAN DROWNED.—Between 8 and 9 o'clock yesterday morning, a small row-boat, containing a Sergeant and seven Privates of the United States Army, and two boatmen, named SHEEHAN, (brothers,) was swamped in the East River at the foot of Warren-street. The crew of a French schoonor lying at WOODRUFF & ROBINSON'S wharf, put off to assist the drowning men, and succeeded in rescuing all but one of the SHEEHANS, who sank before he could be reached. The soldiers were a portion of a detachment just arrived from Boston, and were on their way to Governor's Island, when the accident occurred.

THE KNIFE.—JAMES WALLACE, on Wednesday night, while under the influence of liquor, commenced beating his wife. Her brother interfered, and WALLACE drew a knife and stabbed both parties severely, but not fatally. He was arrested yesterday and committed for trial. WILLIAM HAYES was also arrested in the same District, and committed, for stabbing EDWARD FARRELL.

YOUTHFUL THIEVES.—The Police of the Second Precinct, on Wednesday night, arrested a party of ten youthful thieves, whose ages range from 11 to 14 years. Yesterday they were brought before Justice CORNWELL, when the leaders of the gang were sent to the House of Industry, and the others were discharged, with a reprimand.

RE-ARRESTED.—FREDERICK MILLER, arrested several weeks ago, for passing counterfeit money, and who subsequently made his escape, was recaptured yesterday and committed for examination.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—ARCHIBALD GRAHAM, 70 years of age, late on Wednesday night was instantly killed by falling down a flight of stairs, at his residence, in Adelphi street, near Atlantic avenue.

Wallack's Theatre.

A very amusing Comedy in three acts, called "Everybody's Friend," was produced here, Wednesday night, with complete success. It is by STERLING COYNE, a gentleman who has contributed largely to the public's stock of amusement. Plot is not the specialty of the piece; indeed, it would be difficult to find a work of similar length with so little of it. Each act seems to be complete in itself, and might, without any very serious consequences, be detached from the rest. This is not a recommendation, but as a defect it is entirely covered by the genuine humor and brilliancy of the dialogue. It does not often happen that a piece so thoroughly lively and enjoyable, can be witnessed at the theatre. From the rising of the curtain to the fall thereof, the audience is kept in a thorough state of hearty enjoyment. The characters are contrasted with much skill, and the incidents are all of a nature to bring forth their strongest eccentricities. Mr. Felix Featherly is the universal friend—a married man, but devoted to the interests of every one except his wife. To win him from this too generous disposition, Mrs. Felix Featherly contrives a little plot, and the operation o this and the illustration of the gentleman's good-natured difficulties constitutes the whole of the comedy. The hero and his wife are, of course, the principal characters; they are presented in the best possible manner by Mr. LESTER WALLACK and Mrs. HOEY, who are unequaled in this sort of comedy. There is a modest man too played by Mr. BROUGHAM with much humor; and a militia major by Mr. WALCOT. Miss MARY GANNON and Mrs. FLOYD are also in the cast, and contribute notably to the general completeness. We have never seen a better acted piece, even at this theatre, where elegance and completeness always go hand in hand; there was not the slightest hitch or slowness in the entire piece. Its success was unquestionable; the artists were called out twice at the end, and Mr. LESTER WALLACK announced the piece for performance every night until further notice.

AN AUSTRIAN AMNESTY.

The Death of Nena Sahib not Confirmed.

The Royal Mail steamship Persia, Capt. JUDKINS, which sailed from Liverpool at 9:30 on the morn of the 26th ult., arrived at this port yesterday morning.

The Nova Scotian, from Quebec, arrived at bar of the Mersey at 8 A. M. on the 23d, but did not reach Liverpool until twenty-four hours later, on account of the dense fog which prevailed.

The Arago arrived at Southampton on the morning of the 25th.

New postal arrangements have been made between the British Government and the Canadian line of steamers, and, commencing with the Nova Scotian, leaving Liverpool on the 30th November, the vessels are to call at Queenstown to land and receive mails.

The Jason arrived at Galway on the evening of the 25th November.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Proposed Disarmament—The Mission of Lord Cowley—The Volunteer Movement—New School of Oxford, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 25, 1859.

There is no truth whatever in a statement which has been in circulation for the last two days, both here and in Paris, that the Emperor NAPOLEON had proposed a mutual disarmament on the part of England and France. No proposition to that effect has ever been made. This I have on the highest authority.

The Italian question (as far the fate of the Duchies is concerned) is virtually settled.

France has agreed to acquiesce in the decision, should Congres determine to leave them unfettered in the choice of their future rulers, provided their constitution should be monarchical. England, on the other hand, consents that the Legations should be restored to the Holy See. It is believed, however, by those who know best the spirit that now animates the people of this portion of the Peninsula, that they will not be induced peaceably to return to the allegiance of Pope PIUS IX. FARINI'S counsel to them is to fortify their towns; and GARIBALDI'S proclamation on retiring from the command of the volunteer army, plainly indicates his resolve to appear again amongst them in the Spring. The conviction, however, is general, in well-informed circles, that Tuscany, Modena and Parma will e which twenty years ago took its rise in that ancient seminary of learning. German criticism and the advances of the exact sciences at home, has begun to tell upon the abler and younger scholars of the University. A series of works have appeared from the pen of Rev. Baden Powell, Professor of Chemistry at Oxford, tending to shake the established faith in the literal inspiration of Scripture.

A still more powerful and influential teacher of the new school is Rev. Mr. Jowett, professor of Greek, whose erudite commentary on the writings of St. Paul has thrown the heads of both the Puseyite and Evangelical Party into a paroxysm of rage. One of the latter, Dr. Goulburn, not long ago called upon the Vice-Chancellor to summon Dr. Jowett before him, as the statutes authorizes him to do, in order that he might require him to renew his subscription of the Thirty-nine Articles. The Professor attended; Dr. Goulburn was there, and sought to bring about a conversation on the subject of their interview. But Dr. Jowett quietly baffled his tormentor by pertinaciously talking about the weather, and as soon as he had signed the list he took his leave.

But the greatest sensation of all has been excited by the publication of Rev. Dr. Maunsell's course of sermons, delivered by him as Brampton Lecturer for the year. In them the preacher, who is an eloquent as well as most exemplary man, lays down broadly that a very large portion of the Bible is beyond our finite capacity to comprehend; and that literal interpretation is the mere audacity of ignorance and vanity.

MISCELLANEOUS ENGLISH NEWS.

Lord Cowley, the British Ambassador to France, had arrived in London, and it was reported that his mission was to lay before the English Government a proposal from the French Government for a simultaneous disarmament by England and France. Another report is that he was summoned to receive final instructions from the British Cabinet respecting the Congress.

A Cabinet Council had been held in London, and Lord Cowley had had an audience of the Queen at Windsor.

The English Government had decided upon making a considerable increase in the army by the formation of a second battalion to each of the regiments up to and including the Thirty-fifth, by which means an increase equivalent to eleven regiments will be obtained. The London Post says: This measure ought to excite no surprise when the small amount of the British army is compared with the extent of territory which it has to occupy, and the drafts necessary for India and China.

The over-due steamer Tasmanian, with the West India mails, had reached Southampton. Fifty cases of yellow fever had occurred on board, ten of which proved fatal.

Mr. Barry, the American horse-tamer, was operating at Liverpool with great success.

John Mitchel, in a letter from Paris, regarding the movement being made in Ireland to obtain an amnesty for himself and his fellow exiles, declares that he would accept no amnesty. He adds:

"I do not know whether my two friends and comrades now in the United States would avail themselves of the 'amnesty,' if granted. For my part, I certainly would not. I hope indeed to go to Ireland again, but never by the Queen of England's good will. It would be impossible for me to live there under her Government without endeavoring to overthrow it. I should instantly conspire, confederate and combine with person and persons once more against the peace of our said Lady the now Queen, her crown and dignity, and so forth; whereupon she would again pack a Jury of true-blue Castle Protestants, again steal my letters in the Post-office, again set Baron Lefroy upon my track, (does the Baron still live?) and all the detectives and suborners, again seize my person and plunder my children, under a false pretence of law. Oh, no! I cannot go back to live in Ireland under her dominion, yet I hope to go back to live in Ireland."

THE BRITISH OCCUPATION OF PERIM.

From the London Times, Nov. 24.

The small island of Perim, distant ninety miles from the British settlement of Aden, at the entrance of the Red Sea, is undoubtedly in our possession. It has been in our possession more than once, and has been more than once voluntarily evacuated, but it was last occupied in the month of January, 1857, under the orders of the Governor of Aden, with the view of making it the foundation for a lighthouse. It is occupied by from fifty to sixty persons, and this number includes only a single European, a young officer of the Bombay Artillery, who has about as pleasant a life of it as a light-keeper in a floating beacon. The rest are natives of India detached from the Aden garrison, comprising 25 sappers and 30 gunners. The sappers are occupied in keeping up the water tanks and store-rooms—no easy task—and the defence of the place devolves upon the gunners, who, however, have no guns. We need be at no trouble to inform our French neighbors of the exigencies attending anything like a settlement on the coasts of the Red Sea. Arabs on one side and Africans on the other are always menacing aggression, and no position would afford an hour's security which was not proof against sudden attack. This protection, and this only, has been provided for the 60 men stationed on the Isle of Perim. A small work has been formed of just sufficient size to contain this little garrison and its stores, and of just sufficient strength to resist the only weapons with which the probable assailants would be armed. It is musketry proof, and that is all. It is about as serviceable as a log-house or blockhouse, furnishing a very good shelter against native marauders, but nothing more. That is literally the whole story of the supposed fortifications and garrison. Beyond the work we have described there are no defences whatever. There is not, nor has there ever been, a single gun on the island. The great difficulty lies in keeping up the supply of provisions. Communications with Aden are maintained by a boat which plies every fourteen days between the two places, and which relieves ten or twelve men of the garrison on each occasion, the officer in command being released once a quarter. It is thought desirable that the provisions on the rock should suffice for three months' consumption, and the water for twice that time, but so great is the trouble involved, and so serious is the risk of privation, that it has recently been determined to establish another source of supply. For this purpose a condensing engine and a cargo of coal were to be dispatched from Aden, and these, if they have arrived, are the only pieces of engineering which the island contains.

Having said this much of Perim and its garrison, we are now bound to say something more, and perhaps our neighbors will not take our explanation any the less readily because it really contains a confession. We must needs acknowledge that, though Perim is neither a Malta nor a Rhodes, though it is not a citadel, not a fortress, not a stronghold, not a battery—though it is none of these things—yet neither is it what it ought to be—a proper lighthouse. We can, however, most truly affirm that this is the actual origin and destination of the settlement, and that, if the design has not been accomplished, it has been owing only to those official delays and vacillations which are but too common in such proceedings. Be it remembered that Perim consults with Aden, Aden with Bombay, Bombay with Calcutta, and Calcutta with England. It did happen that, at first, the plan of putting Aden in direct communication with England, instead of sending dispatches all round the circle and back again, was really allowed to prevail, but the Admiralty somehow got hold of the question, and the proper form of the light and lighthouse had to be discussed between the independent authorities of Leadenhall-street and Whitehall. This, of course, was not conducive to expedition, and, though the controversy was terminated at last, and an engineer dispatched from Bombay to complete the surveys and plans some twelve months ago, the contemplated lighthouse has not been erected yet. To this omission, then, we must plead guilty, but, if French affairs never suffer from similar delays, we can only say that our neighbors are truly fortunate in their administration.

SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON ON THE NATIONAL DEFENCES.

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 24, a meeting called by the Lord Provost, was held in the City Hall, Glasgow, for the purpose of considering the best means of promoting the volunteer movement in Glasgow. It is stated that at least 4,000 citizens were present, a number of whom were in rifle uniform; and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. Among the speakers was Sir Archibald Alison, who, in the course of his remarks, said: "There is one point which is often urged by the people of this country—that we need not be afraid of the French, for we have a great mercantile navy of 200,000 men; but in the present state of matters this great mercantile navy is far from being a refuge or support. The wages in the mercantile navy average 50s. a month, while those in the Royal Navy are only 31s. The mercantile navy is a huge competitor with the Royal Navy. Even in the militia there were 100,000 men less in February last than the House of Commons provided for. What is the cause of that? How cannot we get men in sufficient numbers to make up the militia roll? Simply because a soldier's pay is 1s. 1d. per day, whilst a man may earn 2s. 3s. 4s. or 5s. per day at his own trade. The upholding of our empire in India is another source of anxiety—the keeping of so many millions in subjection requiring the presence of so many troops. We have for the last 15 years been impoverished by the continual tide of immigration. In three years 3,000,000 persons immigrated to the colonies or foreign countries, and the average has since been about 250,000 per annum. This is also a difficulty with which we have to contend in bringing our defences to the proper standard. I would not mention these things unless I were able to point out a remedy. The first step towards it is to raise the pay of the soldiers and sailors and the militia from 1s. 1d. to 1s. 6d. or 1s. 8d. per day; and I venture to say that ere long we will find soldiers to fill the ranks, and sailors to man the navy sufficient for any emergency in which we may be placed. It is necessary that we should have a great volunteer force in addition to our regular army. I believe that a volunteer corps can be made second to none in discipline, and their conduct already shows how far public spirit can go. It is necessary that there should be a thorough organization. I hope the subject may be forced upon Government, and that the volunteer corps in the kingdom may be formed into brigaded battalions. A military commander should be appointed for every two or three counties, but the great matter is, that the whole force should be brought to bear upon the front of danger. The points which an invading army would aim at are London and Woolwich. If the latter place were taken, we would be entirely without army supplies. We must, therefore, have resources for bringing all the volunteers of the kingdom together. They might support the soldiers as light troops in any possible way, and no doubt they would add greatly to the strength of the regular troops. I believe that, under these circumstances, Great Britain would be impregnable."

ANOTHER LETTER FROM DR. WADDINGTON.

The reverend pastor of the Southwark church is still the object of attack in the London papers, for his alleged Pro-Slavery leanings during his late run through the United States, and has found it necessary to address another defense to the editor of the London Star:

Sir: I must now test your love of fair play. The first greeting on my return from America in the English Press I found in your journal—to the effect that I had disgraced my country by the course I had pursued in my absence from home. It is only right that you should receive the testimony of men who had the best opportunity of judging, from personal observation. Dr. Beckwith, the Secretary of the Peace Society, writing on the eve of my embarkation, says: "I am glad to know how well you have been employed, and as well received, with every demonstration of respect and sympathy for yourself and your object in every quarter." Dr. Kirk, well-known as a zealous and decided friend of Abolition, said, at the valedictory meeting: "We have found in Dr. Waddington a man worthy to represent the pilgrims among us. His warmest friends could ask no higher commendation; our consciences would permit us to say no less; and now, in your name, shall I salute our dear transatlantic brother, thanking him for his visit, for his invaluable researches, his instructive addresses, and the happy influence he has exercised in this land. Yes, I will thank him for you. He has done us an invaluable service, in pointing us from the fruits we so much enjoy to the tree we so readily forget.

My brother, go back with the assurance that you have a place in our hearts never to be vacated. Henceforward you are to us a living monument of the fathers we venerate and the principles we cherish. We regard you as a living link between two nations, whose quarrels belonged to an age forever past: who glory in each other's honor, and cherish only the conviction of their essential oneness."

I do not know that these quotations will be interesting to those who prefer a little detraction; but I think there are many readers of the Star who would be glad to know that there is such a feeling of regard for England in Boston, Mass., notwithstanding the moment at Bunker Hill; and it may be interesting there to learn that all I said and did in America was not reckoned as disgraceful. I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

JOHN WADDINGTON.

FRANCE.

Reawkening of the War Fever—The Course of the London Times—Resignation of Garibaldi—The Advisers of the Austrian Emperor—Miscellaneous.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Thursday, Nov. 22, 1859.

Again the war spirit of the Parisians is on fire. The departure of the soldiers for China has revived the long-to-be-remembered scenes of last Spring, at the moment of departure for the war in Italy. The expedition is now infinitely smaller, but then the soldiers were going scarcely to cross their frontiers, while now they are going to the other side of the globe, to an unknown and mysterious country. The interest in the expedition is thus ten-fold increased, especially to the friends of those who form a part of it. The expedition is made up entirely of volunteers, that is to say, volunteers from the ranks of the soldiers. The struggle to form part of this army, especially among the officers, was greater than has been manifested in any war of later times: the whole army of France seemed desirous of going. Yesterday the second battalion of Foot Chasseurs, corps d'élite, passed through town on their way to the station of the Brest railroad: it is from Brest that they sail. All their heavy baggage having gone on in advance, they were much less heavily ladened than when leaving for Italy. Each man carried a knapsack, one day's munition of bread and wine, a drinking cup, and his gun—the new rifled musket. But they were not incumbered with tent-poles and tents, nor cooking apparatus; all that had been packed and sent on board ship, to be opened only on the soil of China, on the march to Peking. As they passed through the streets, the Chasseurs, although marching at a quick-step, were accompanied by their relatives and friends, who hung on the skirts of the procession to get a few parting words, and to wish the departing soldier good luck and a safe return. The band went off playing the Milanaise, the famous air with which they drove the Austrians out of Lombardy last Summer. It revived souvenirs that boded illy for the poor Chinese. Up to the last hour there was a terrible fear in the barracks that, by some change in diplomacy, the order to march might be countermanded; so that when the order arrived from the Ministry yesterday morning, to get ready for 12 o'clock, there was great rejoicing in the barracks of Paris; the men went away light-hearted and gay. The gamins in the street, however, could not understand how the single loaf of bread strapped on each man's back was going to last him all the way to China, but the soldiers insisted, nevertheless, that this was the only supply of which they had any knowledge.

Thus you see France is always at war, and by the force of habit her soldiers look upon warfare as upon any other of the esential occupations of life; it is a profession in which they find nothing astonishing. Six weeks ago a war was commenced between the French and the Moors, on the frontiers of Algeria, and in just twenty days it was brought to a close by the submission of all the refractory tribes. In that time two battles and several skirmishes were fought, and one-fifth of the whole French force was killed by the cholera. Some of the best officers in the army—Gen. Thomas and the Col. Count Montalembert—died of the epidemic, but they did not stop for this; fighting and marching are their normal condition, and cholera is only a coincidence of secondary importance. By the time the war in China is brought to a close, there will be another one hatched up somewhere, so as to keep the army in practice.

The London Times, basing its confidence in the Revue Independante, a French journal of London, patronized by the refugees, makes the assertion that the French army believed itself going to England, instead of China, and that, until they shall have been embarked and on the route the soldiers will still believe themselves on the way to England. One hardly knows which most to admire in this statement, its absurdity or its falsity. Does the Times suppose that a war can be got up in France against England without convulsing the country to its very centre, without instructing the army as to the mighty work it had before it, without diffusing the knowledge of such an event to the remotest hamlets of the country? The Times says that never did the army and the people of France talk more of a war with England as a probable contingency than at the present moment. This is simply not true, as every man knows who lives here and has daily communication with the army and people. The remark of the London journal is based upon that of the French Review already mentioned, and has no other foundation whatever. There is a certain amount of talk of such a war at all times, for England is an old and hated enemy; the army never ceases to talk more or less of such a war, and it is only when the London Times awakens attention by its cries and its false alarms, that this talk in the French army is increased.

Recently the Times has seen fit to break out suddenly with a cry of alarm louder, shriller, and more prolonged than is usual, even with that noisy sheet. It pretends that it has been pushed to this course by the violence of the French press against England, and the real indications which exist this side the channel of a coming war. But all this is but a piece of transparent charlatanry on the part of the Times, which every one in France who watches its course understands. It was the Times itself, which, a month ago pushed the French Press to the utterance of acrimonious words against England. The French Press is never the first to begin these violent polemics; it is contrary to the habits and the spirit of the Press of to-day to act on the offensive. It is the least combative, the least given to gratuitous attacks on its neighbors of any Press in any country where the Press has yet acquired the level of an institution. If there were no other reasons for this character in the French Press of to-day, the severe law regulating its discussions would sufficiently explain it.

But now see wherein lies the culpable charlatanry of the Times. It first provokes the French Press by gratuitous and impertinent attacks on the French Government. It then ceases its diatribes for a short time, in order to give the French Press, (which must take time for all the matter they publish,) to reply, and then the Times, having itself ceased to attack, assumes that the French are taking the initiative, without cause and without provocation, and then the Times sounds the alarm and reutters its old insults and invectives with more noise and fury than ever. This is exactly the history of what has taken place the last two months, and it is the exact counterpart of a dozen other crises that have preceded it since Louis Napoleon has been in power.

But the Times has just given the most superb example of its arrogance and egotism we have yet had. It pretends that its warnings and advice to the French Government were so powerful that the Government has ordered the French Press, through the medium of the Prefects, to moderate its tone against England! This caps the climax of John Bull impertinence and self-sufficiency! The Patrie denies that any such order has been given to the French Press, and most assuredly if it were to be given, it would not be at the command of the London Times. But this is only the dénouement of the scheme the Times has laid, to give itself importance and to make itself talked about. To-day it calculates that all England is wondering at the manner in which the Times directs and controls the Government of France. The hold which it thus has upon the confidence and the respect of the English people is reinvigorated and strengthened. It needs from time to time one of these coups de théatre in order to maintain its colossal reputation. But it requires no great penetration to see through this harlequinade of the Times, and once understood, it sinks to the level of a pitiable and feeble, but, nevertheless, wicked juggiery.

The sudden resignation of Garibaldi took every one by surprise, and his proclamation was the cause of a thousand surmises as to the exact character and locality of the "miserable and astute policy" to which he there refers. In France, people very naturally refer his complaints to Italy, as a locality, and to his quarrels with Gen. Fanti, as a cause; while in Italy they point to Paris as the locality, and to the "astute and miserable policy" of Napoleon as the cause. Which of the two opinions is correct I will not pretend to say, but perhaps both contributed their part to the general result. Beside these, it is said that his troops were deserting, on account of their inactivity, and that Mazzini, taking advantage of this circumstance, was renewing his intrigues, and in such a way that, if Garibaldi remained in command, he might be compromised in his present allegiance to Victor Emanuel and the cause of order. But there is still another reason, and that is, that the Dictator Farini, acting under the advice of the King, wished Garibaldi to remove his troops further from the Roman frontier, so as to avoid every shadow of a chance for a collision. Although Garibaldi has retired, for the moment, from the Army of the League, he obtains the rank of Lieutenant-General in the Piedmontese Army—the first time, I believe, in his life, he has ever held a commission in a regular army, and his influence will not be lost to the great cause of Italian independence.

It is a singular fact that the high personages who now surround the person of the Emperor of Austria are of French origin. Thus, M. Foliot de Crenneville replaces the Count de Grunn as Aid-de-camp and companion of the young sovereign. The second Aid-de-camp is M. Bigot de St. Quentin. The Baron Hubner has been replaced in the Ministry of Police by M. Thierry. These new appointments, added to the especial favor shown to the young Prince de Metternich, Austrian Ambassador at Paris, induce people to believe in an alliance between the two countries for political purposes. But there are also reasons for the belief that no such alliance exists, and that the circumstances referred to are mere coincidences. Not long ago a Count O'Connell was the Aid-de-camp and companion of Francis Joseph, and not less than thirty-seven Irish and English names occur on the list of officers of the Austrian army. So, too, in the French army, there are O'Malleys, McMahons, Nells, O'Haras and Smiths.

M. Meissonnier, the distinguished painter, is now terminating, at his chateau at Poissy, the picture which was commanded of him by the Emperor, of the battle of Solferino. M. Meissonnier, who was present at the battle, intends to return again to the battle-field before allowing his picture to go before the public. It is said to be a work of great merit.

Mr. Seward, in company with the Count de Sartiges, was invited to Compiègne one day last week, and had a long interview with the Emperor. The Count, who believes firmly in the election of Mr. Seward at the next Presidential election, no doubt introduced the Senator to His Majesty as the prospective President; but since Mr. Douglas was thus introduced at St. Cloud five years ago, and then failed his election, His Majesty, perhaps, made a mental reservation this time. Nevertheless, Mr. Seward had every reason to be gratified with the distinguished manner in which he was received by the Emperor.

On Sunday last, the congregation of the American chapel in this city was thrown into an irrepressible smile by an extraordinary "bull" of the minister. Since the departure of Rev. Mr. Szeley to the United States, the congregation has been dependent upon volunteers, and last Sunday the pulpit was filled by an English clergyman who, no doubt, knew more about theology than about the Government of the United States. He announced, by request, that the following Thursday (to-day) would be observed in that Chapel as Thanksgiving Day, conformably to a custom in the United States, and he said that after the collection, he would read the Proclamation of the President of the United States, naming that day as a day of General Thanksgiving. When the time arrived, the good man commenced reading as follows: "Be it known that I, Edward D. Morgan, Governor of the State of New-York, do hereby appoint," etc. I have heard of certain members of the congregation who are laughing yet.

A gentleman from Newark, N. J., was yesterday arrested at the Hotel du Louvre, and carried before the Prefect of Police, where he was examined two hours on the supposition that he was Mazzini in disguise.

MALAKOFF.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The number of deaths from cholera in the French army, during the twenty days' campaign against the frontier tribes of Morocco, was 2,106.

The French Government was forming large dépôts of coal, to provide against the inconveniences that might result in any future war, from coal being declared contraband of war.

The sailing-frigate La Vengeance had left for China, with 400 marines on board.

A Paris semi-official journal states that the communications between the French and English squadrons at Algesiras, continued to be most friendly. It was expected that the greater portion of the French vessels would soon return to Toulon.

Count Pourtales, the Prussian Ambassador at Paris, is said to have been instructed to give the French Government authentic explanations of the late interview between the Prince Regent of Prussia and the Emperor of Russia.

The Moniteur announces the appointment of the Marquis de Moustier as French Ambassador to Austria.

A pension of 12,000 francs had been accorded to the widow of Gen. Espinasse, who was killed in Italy.

Semi-official paragraphs had been dispatched to the provincial journals encouraging the impression that the Emperor had charged Lord Cowley to represent to her Britannic Majesty his willingness to promote a general disarmament in Europe.

The Paris Bourse was firm and tending upward. Rentes closed on the 25th at 70-20.

THE ITALIAN QUESTION.

THE CONGRESS.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says a decided difficulty had grown up in reference to the proposed Congress. The invitations had not been issued. Austria was said to be the cause of the delay.

"At the moment of going to press," says the Opinion Nationale of the evening of the 24th, "we learn that the invitation to the Congress has been forcibly postponed in consequence of a fresh demand on the part of England. That Power is said to require, 1st, That the decisions of Congress shall not be obligatory. 2d, That in the event of the dethroned Princes not being restored, the form of Government shall be clearly stipulated beforehand."

Another authority says (somewhat in contradiction of the above) that Prince Metternich had remitted to Count Walewski the letters from the Austrian Government addressed to the Foreign Powers, invitiug them to take part in the Congress. These invitations were to be delivered at their respective destinations by the French couriers, conveying similar invitations from the French Government.

On the day when the ratifications were exchanged at Zurich, M. Armand delivered to the Austrian Plenipotentiary a draft at sight for 20,000,000 florins. The remaining 80,000,000 are to be paid in four installments at short intervals.

It was reported that Count Rechberg, assisted by Prince Metternich, will represent Austria at the Congress.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, in his latest letter, confirms the statement that the invitations to the Congress had been delayed, not from any difference between the English and French Cabinets, but rather owing to some difficulties started by Austria on the Regency question. The Vienna correspondent of the same journal says it was rumored in diplomatic circles there that there were still many and great difficulties to be removed before the Congress could meet.

The members of the French and Austrian Missions at Paris and Vienna had received decorations according to their rank from the respective Governments to which they are accredited, as also have the representatives at Zurich.

THE REGENCY OF THE CENTRAL STATES.

The Sardinian Government has addressed the following dispatch, on the subject of the Regency of Central Italy, to its diplomatic representatives at the various Courts:

Turin, Nov. 15, 1859.

M. le Ministre: The assemblies of Central Italy, as you are aware, have offered the Regency to his Royal Highness the Prince de Savoy-Carignan. Marked by the calmness and order which characterised the vote of annexation, their deliberations were as spontaneous as they were unanimous.

The King's Government were completely strangers to the resolution. It is solely and simply the result of national tendencies which the fear of a restoration has but made stronger and more vigorous; it is a new homage rendered to the monarchical principle; a new proof of the firm determination of those countries to maintain order and authority, to augment and shelter from all attack the prestige of the supreme power. This resolution attests in fine, the ardent desire of the populations of Central Italy to see their union with the monarchy of Sardinia consummated—a settlement which can alone, in their opinion, give solid guarantees of national liberty and independence.

In the presence of a vote so imposing, and motives so powerful, the King our august Sovereign thought that his first duty was to obviate the perils of disorder and anarchy, reasonably to be apprehended if the offer of the assemblies was not received. But, assured of the early meeting of a Congress called to solve the questions raised by the situation of Italy, his Majesty hastened to make an act of deference to the councils of Europe by abstaining from any decision which might be regarded as of a nature to interfere with their entire liberty of examination and deliberation. Agreeably to his Majesty's intentions, Monsigneur the Prince de Carignan, despite his sincere sympathies for the deputations who came to him to intrust him with the care of governing them, did not judge it his duty to accept the Regency which they offered. At the same time, it was impossible for his Majesty, as well as the Prince, not to seriously consider the motives which had dictated the offers of the assemblies Central Italy, and not to concur in the measure suggested to them by high motives of expediency to guarantee from all agitation those countries who have placed their confidence in the House of Savoy. His Royal Highness has accordingly believed himself able to appoint the Chevalier Buoncompagni to take the regency of those Provinces, until assembled Europe has regularized their position. This proof of friendly solicitude will, the King's government believes, tranquilize the public mind. Centred in one hand, authority will be more vigorous and powerful. It will keep in a respectful attitude the factions which, profiting by the public impatience, might attempt to incite the populations and the army to inconsiderate and dangerous acts. In a word, it is a pledge to the security of Italy, to the tranquility of Europe, while the Congress are deliberating upon the questions unfolded before it.

But—we cannot hide it—this measure, by its provisional character, will not completely reassure us, if it should be much prolonged. It is urgent that the Congress should meet as soon as possible, just as it is of vital necessity that the solution it deems fit to adopt shall be such as, by satisfying the needs and wishes of the Italian populations shall put an end forever to internal revolutions or foreign interventions. Long delays will be fatal. A solution which did not guarantee the national independence of Italy would be but a source of new evils for the Italians—of agitation and of conflicts for Europe.

I invite you, M. le Ministre, to bring the contents of this dispatch to the knowledge of the Government of ——— while urging the speedy meeting of the Congress.

Receive, &c.,

D'ABORMIDA.

PRINCE CARIGNAN ON THE REGENCY.

The Florence Nazione publishes the following letter, addressed by the Prince of Carignan to the Commandeur Matteucci at Pisa:

Monsieur le Commandeur: I cannot find words sufficient to express to you my sincere gratitude for the letter you have been good enough to address to me. The vote of the Assemblies of Central Italy—a vote which I believe must be attributed to the affection of the Italians towards the King than to myself individually—was very agreeable to my feelings, though above my merits. Trust me, then, that the sacrifice I made, in preventing me from instantly discharging in person the honorable mission confided to me, is a very great one. I should have been happy to prove to the Italians my entire affection as well as the sincere gratitude I feel towards them; but, in spite of my wishes, that could not be effected. I have the satisfaction of believing that, on the eve of a European Congress, that sacrifice will be more useful to the Italians than my presence, as it is destined to efface all suspicion. * * * * * * *

I comprehend all the difficulty of the situation of Central Italy, but we must not lose courage. We must, on the contrary, redouble our energy, be united and armed, and maintain that perfect order which has done so much honor to the Italians in these later times, and which, by challenging the admiration of the world, will doubtless be their most powerful support before the Congress. My reply to Commandeur Minghetti and M. Peruzzi must, I trust, have reassured the Italians I have done all that I could, and you know that I am honest, and that I long for nothing in the world but to see Italy happy. Accept, &c.. &c.

EUGENE OF SAVOY.

A REPUBLICAN VIEW.

LETTER OF M. MAZZINI TO BARON RICASOLI.

Sir: I have been informed that you have in your possession a letter of mine containing a plan of military operations in Perugia, which has given rise to persecutions and annoyance.

Were I to address myself solely to you in your character of Tuscan Minister, it might be sufficient to assure you that the letter in question concerns in no way the affairs of Tuscany; that it does not appeal in the least to the Tuscan functionaries; that it does not threaten either Government or people. But I prefer addressing myself to the patriot—to the man who loves to confer with his friends as I do with mine—of the unity of Italy as the only aim and end to be attained by the present movement. In proposing this movement I mean to indicate the only operation which not only can accomplish the object in view, but also of saving Tuscany from an inevitable restoration. You profess to know as certain fact (which is far from proved as yet) that King Victor accepts the fusion of Central Italy; and that the acceptation since the treaty of Villafranca is equivalent to a declaration of war you have too much perception not to behold. The revolution must be extended, or it is useless; localized it becomes powerless. Central Italy is lost if it does not at once fix its basis upon a foundation as sure and strong as that of the Government. The elements which compose the strength of Central Italy are condemned to disunion; the two columns commanded by Gen. Rosetti threaten mutiny if nothing be done to prevent it—a very natural thing to happen with volunteers from Ombria, the Marsh of Ancona, and Venice, who fight with enthusiasm, if, instead of being soldiers of Parma and Bologna, they were fighting for their own rights. Revolution, which does not press forward the cause, can only serve to retard it by many years, and the elements which compose the strength of Tuscany are undermined by discontent, which originates, in a great measure, from the Duke's party. By throwing the volunteers into active service they would remain steadfast, with the hope of promotion; by keeping them unemployed they will ferment—they do ferment; and one of these days they will give the signal of civil war. Our late masters are waiting for this result, in order to be able to cry out to Europe: Behold!

The election of Garibaldi as active chief would be accepted with enthusiasm, and if that activity so universally desired be withheld much longer, it will give, as you well know, fresh cause of discont nt to the regular militia. Before the retaking of Perugia, Rome herself, compelled at present to remain quiet, will rise—the soldiers forming the cutposts of the Pontifical army will join our columns—and between Perugia and the Abruzzi there is nothing to resist us. Eight or ten thousand men with the name of Garibaldi, and the movement in Sicily, which has been prepared for a long time, and ready for explosion at a moment's notice, would become the insurrection of the whole state. The insurrection of the State would swell the movement in Italy to such proportions that its chiefs would be entitled to treat on terms of equality, as from Power to Power, for the move must bring the King of Sardinia once more upon the field of action.

France cannot take up arms without bringing upon herself a war with the whole of Europe—Germany, Russia, England.

These things I should have told you, and all men who have been chosen to rule the country, if, instead of treating us like enemies and forcing us to abandon our country, you had been led to look upon us as men who love Italy, and for the last thirty years have been endeavoring to educate her in those sentiments of unity without which she will be lost once more.

The proposition I now make may be considered as imprudent, but cannot be considered guilty. I have sought no other aim than unity. It is for this alone that I have fought so long. I have always been, and ever shall be, unitarian in principle before anything. Those who know me may reproach me with many faults, but will acknowledge that my soul is too proud to stoop to falsehood.

I speak not for myself when I say that the persecution of exiles is a shame and reproach to Tuscany, and will injure the cause beyond all reparation. Those exiles have risen since Villafranca, for the sole purpose not of disturbing the internal Government of the country, which they admire, and which is necessary to insure its respectability in the eyes of Europe, but merely in the hope of beholding an equal energy imparted to the external relations of the Government, for I am sure that the restoration will be tried, and our task is to prevent it, without any foreign or forced and imposed help. Great numbers of volunteers have enlisted, more would do so were it not for the persecutions to which they are subjected.

I have felt the necessity of telling you these things and of exposing to you the feelings of the man who loves Italy and national union better than his life.

Believe me, Signor, yours obliged,

GIUSEPPE MAZZINI.

MANIFESTO OF THE TUSCAN GOVERNMENT.

The Tuscan Monitore of Nov. 17 publishes a note which the Tuscan Government has sent to the principal Governments of Europe respecting the vote passed by the National Assembly at its sitting on the 9th ult. The note says:

"The day on which the Congress shall be called upon to legislate on the rights reserved in the treaty of Zurich, it may be released from all fear of having to infringe on the principle of legitimacy; it will have merely to consider Austrian interests. We are confident that the great, the real intention of the Congress will be to secure the independence, and, with that, the peace of Italy.

This result can only be obtained by sanctioning and acknowledging the votes of the independent States of the Peninsula. Any other combination would be not merely an Italian but a European calamity.

In support of this truth, we have a consideration that deserves mature reflection. Were it unfortunately to happen that the great Powers assembled in Congress should declare themselves opposed to the wishes and legitimate votes of the Italian people, one of these two eventualities would necessarily result: either Piedmont, as we believe and as all Italian think with us, would refuse to adhere to this decision, and then every one sees what deplorable consequences might ensue, such as fresh conflicts, fresh effusion of blood, and probably a threatening future big with infinite perils; or, Piedmont from a feeling of excessive but ill-judged prudence would join in the decision so taken and side with diplomacy against the popular aspirations, in which case its prestige in Italy and its popularity would be irrevocably lost. But with the prestige of Piedmont dies also in Italy faith in the monarchical principle.

In moments of such gravity it would be childish to deceive one's self. The monarchical feeling, with which the Italian people are animated, has its entire origin in the respect and affection they entertain for the dynasty of Savoy. This respect and affection are inspired by the universal and profound conviction that this august dynasty represents loyally and courageously the national idea. Hence its strength and immense authority, but hence likewise the imperious necessity of sparing no sacrifice or struggle to maintain so grand and noble a position. The enthusiastic affection of the Italians for this dynasty, and their unlimited confidence in it, would be changed to quite opposite sentiments on the very day that they should see the Piedmontese Government following a policy suspected by them of being weak or selfish. The very fact of the acquisition of Lombardy would become the subject of terrible recriminations, of which extreme parties would take advantage with insatiable ardor. Thus the monarchical principle, when allied with the national idea, would have extinguished in Italy the spirit of revolution, and caused the sects to disappear, while the decisions of the Congress would bring them back to life, and impart to the revolutionary spirit a formidable intensity.

This is the fatal alternative that would be brought about by a decision of the Congress in opposition to the votes of the Independent Italian States; either the very great probability of a fresh sanguinary collision, or an immense discredit thrown upon the monarchical principle, with a terrible agitation and the dangerous contagion of all the revolutionary passions.

Let Europe remember the bitter censures justly provoked by the treaties of 1815, which settled the destinies of nations without their knowledge or consent. The Congress of 1859 would be acting worse still, for whereas the treaties of 1815 disposed of the non-consenting peoples, the Congress of 1859 would dispose of the same, notwithstanding their notorious repugnance. In the former case, ignorance of their wants and feelings might be alleged, but now such a justification would be inadmissible. Lastly, let Europe consider the insurmountable difficulties attending the practical execution of any determination adverse to us.

We have said already that we declined all threatening intention; we are bound to repeat it now. Should the decisions of the Congress receive favorably and, as we hope, sanction our votes, we shall be delighted, as by a great act of justice, and we shall be grateful for it to Europe. Should the sentence be against us, we shall be under the lamentable necessity of not accepting it, and if attacked, we shall endeavor to repel, however certain to succumb, force by force.

The Powers intervening at the Congress, by ignoring our rights and refusing us the justice that is our due, will be exposed to this dilemma: either the mortification of seeing their decision not carried out, or the necessity of committing a monstrous abuse of violence, condemned by public opinion and the conscience of the whole world.

Florence, Nov. 14, 1859.

MANIFESTO OF THE PAPAL COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Gen. de Kalbermatten, Commander-in-Chief of the Pontifical army, has issued from Pesaro the following order of the day to his troops:

Soldiers—During the last seven months you have found yourselves exposed to the most infernal seductions and machinations. The chiefs of the revolution have constantly endeavored, in their proclamations and in the journals, to calumniate the Pontifical army. At present, changing their tactics, they seek by the most insidious means to induce you to desert and swell the ranks of the sacrilegious aggressors of the States of the Holy See; they invite you to abandon your colors, that is to say, to dishonor and debase yourselves—it is a gross insult which they address to you. Those felons! they dare suppose that Catholic soldiers, who have so long waited impatiently for the moment to combat for the noblest and most holy of causes, could betray their God, their sovereign and their oaths! Patience, soldiers! the day of justice is at hand. Be proud of the important services which you have rendered to the State, and of your admirable discipline, your good conduct and your perfect union, for they have attracted the particular attention of the Holy Father and the admiration of the Catholic world. Your General is proud of commanding you, for he knows your worth and what he may expect from you.

GENERAL NEWS FROM ITALY.

Gen. Garibaldi had quitted Nice for Genoa. Before his departure he addressed the inhabitants of Nice, and said:

"I shall resume my command when necessary. Let us be united under Victor Emanuel; let us continue under arms so long as an inch of Italian soil remains oppressed."

A letter from Nice of the 19th says:

"Gen. Garibaldi has arrived here, to the great astonishment of everybody. Not a soul knew anything of his coming, with the exception of Col. Dérderi, his host, who received a telegraphic dispatch the evening before to apprise him of it. The proclamation addressed by the General to the Italians will excite great interest, as it throws light on what is passing in Central Italy, and seems to explain the real state of affairs. Garibaldi left Bologna some days ago, passed through Turin, only staying just long enough to see the King, and got here at the same time as the Turin journals which announced his arrival in the capital. I have seen the General; he is in excellent health, notwithstanding all the fatigue which he has undergone. His position here imposes on him the strictest reserve. He is not generally very communicative, and now ne is less so than usual, but his every word betrays a profound irritation."

Bologna, which in 1849 kept the Austrian army at bay for eight days, was being fortified and provisioned at the suggestion of Farini.

The Tuscan Government had abolished the stamp on newspapers.

Gen. Fanti, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Central Italy, had issued a new order of the day. After speaking of the difficulties which have been overcome in the space of three months, he says:

"To-day we have numerous phalanxes of infantry, of cavalry, and of artillery; we possess field batteries and siege artillery; arsenals are being erected, ammunition ambulances and transports are being organized, fortifications are being erected at Mirandole and at Rimini; and Bologna, surrounded with guns, will become at no distant period a centre which will give us safety and protection in any eventuality."

The General advises patience and constancy. With perseverance, he says, we shall triumph over the enemy, who does not feel strong at home; who reads his ruin in our attitude, and who will be compelled either to ignominously lay down his arms before public reprobation, or come despairingly to battle with the certainty of defeat.

The Schiller Centenary—Decay of the Monarchical Sentiment—European Ideas of America—The Latest German Traveler in the United States.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

Munich, Tuesday, Nov. 8, 1859.

The Schiller Celebration, it is impossible not to see, has other bearings than those of a merely literary nature. In its relation to existing political and religious questions it is far more significant than was the Burns Centenn still leave enough for a great beer garden, under whose leafy shades all Dutchland (yes, and their noses, too!) might sit in comfort, with room for a soak of beer and two Katrinas to each individual.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At the Conference, at Wurzburg, of the representatives of the minor German States, the principal questions to be considered are: The settlement of the right of domicile, the establishment of Federal Courts of Justice, the national demonstration in favor of unity, reform of the Federal laws relating to the army, the Hesse electoral and Holstein questions, and regulations for a uniform system of weights and measures for all Germany.

The Second Chamber of Hesse Cassel, by a vote of 38 against 8, resolved upon addressing a memorial to the Federal Diet, for the reëstablishment of the Constitution of 1831.

In the Federal Diet at Frankfort, the Plenipotentiary of Hesse acceded to the proposals of the Committee, and granted some concessions in reference to the wishes of the Chambers, but persevered in maintaining the Constitution of 1852.

PRUSSIA.

A Berlin dispatch says the King's health had so much improved that his medical attendants had advised his removal to the Isle of Wight.

AUSTRIA.

An imperial autograph letter orders the Ministers to grant a full amnesty to all persons compromised by the part they have taken in Italian affairs. This amnesty will apply to civil as well as military persons. Criminal offences of no political character are to be excepted.

The Vienna Presse states that the effectives of all companies of Austrian infantry is to be reduced from one hundred to eighty men.

SWITZERLAND.

Col. FREY HENOSE, member of the Federal Government of Switzerland, has just been elected to the Presidency of the Confederation for the ensuing year. As President, he is charged with the direction of all political, and particularly of foreign, affairs. The present President of the Confederation is to take the direction of the military department, which is now held by Colonel FREY HEROSE. M. KNUSEL, of Lucerne, has been elected Vice-President of the Executive Government for 1860.

SPAIN.

The Madrid journals continue to publish addresses to the Queen, expressing approbation of the war.

The Spanish Government is said to have entered into contracts with English firms for the supply of different sorts of stores for the army in Morocco, and for a large quantity of English coal for the fleet. Several steamers had also been chartered, and one had already left England for Spain to assist in the transport service.

The Paris correspondent of the Times, says the enthusiasm with which the war with Morocco was hailed, begins slightly to subside in the Basque provinces; and the 3,000 men, which it was agreed should be raised by these provinces, will partly have to be levied by conscription, instead of being composed only of volunteers.

PORTUGAL.

The King of Portugal had signed a decree ordering the dissolution of the Cortes, a measure which had become a vital question for the maintenance of the Ministry. The new Chamber will be convoked for 29th January.

INDIA.

The Bombay mail, of Nov. 12, is telegraphed vid Aden. The reported death of NENA SAHIB is referred to, but the dispatch says it lacked confirmation.

Lord CANNING had addressed the Talookdars of Oude with good effect, at Lucknow.

The Waghurs had evacuated Dwarka, after several days bombardment which reduced the town to ashes.

The campaign against the whites in Bundlecund had been opened, and another upon the Chumbul was looked for.

Exchange on London 2s. 3/4d. Freights, 17s. 6d.@20s.

THE REPORTED DEATH OF NENA SAHIB.

A letter from an Indian officer says that the death of NENA SAHIB had been announced at Allahabad in large printed handbills, but it was regarded as a ruse by the NENA himself to prevent the Winter campaign which was soon to be commenced against him. Oude papers to the 11th of October make no mention of the reported death.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

At the time the mail left, Oct. 22, the money market was reported very tight and the Banks had stopped discounting. The tightness is ascribed to the tendering for Government debentures; the long and very heavy drought had broken up and the rains had set in heavy.

The steamship Impredor, with a submarine cable had touched at the Cape and proceeded to India The steamship Chevy Chase, from Liverpool, has made a quick passage to St. Helena.

A fearful storm had prevailed off the coast, and no less than ten first-class ships were completely wrecked. The news caused much anxiety on 'Change at Liverpool, as many of the ill-fated vessels were owned in that City; one of them, the Star of the East, having a valuable cargo on board. She was bound from the East Indies, and owned by JAMES BEAZLEY, Esq., of Liverpool.

The names of the wrecked vessels are; Wigrams; Surat, Capt. GRAHAM, from Penang to London; Jessalera, Chasseur, Witch of the Wave, Prince Worzonoff, Lyme, Regis, Governess, Star of the East, and Arabian.

The news at present is very vague, and the fate of the crews of the unfortunate ships is, as yet, a mystery.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE BY THE PERSIA.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.

The Stock Market had been firm, and the funds rather higher. On the 25th, however, there was a slight relapse, and Consols closed at 90 1/2@3/4 for money, and 90 3/8@7/8 for account.

The demand for Money had been moderately active and in a few exceptional cases rather less than the Bank minimum had been charged for accommodation.

The weekly returns of the Bank of England show an increase of bullion of £124,934. Messrs. BARING BROTHERS & Co. call the Money Market easy. They quote Bar Silver at 5s. 2 1/2d.; Mexican Dollars 5s. 2 1/2d.. nominal; American Eagles, 76s. 3 1/2d.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, Saturday, Nov. 25.

COTTON.—The Broker's Circular says: "Since the arrival of the steamer (Persia) on Saturday last the trade have bought very sparingly, while other classes of buyers have also taken a limited quantity, the consequence has been a dull and very irregular market, in some instances giving buyers a trifling advantage, the lower qualities continuing very unsalable." East Indian and Macao have declined 1/2d. The sales of the week foot up only 37,819 bales, including 1,150 on speculation and 5,700 for export. On Friday (yesterday) the demand continued moderate, the sales reaching about 6,000 bales, including 1,000 to speculators and exporters. The market closed quiet at the following quotations:

Fair Orleans..... 7 5-8d. | Middling Orleans. 7 5-16d.
Fair Mobiles..... 7 3/8d. | Middling Mobiles... 7 1/2d.
Fair Uplands.....7 5-16d. | Middling Uplands.. 6 3/4d.

Stock on hand is estimated at 425,000, of which 266,000 are American.

AT MANCHESTER.

Although the market was inactive prices continued firm at the highest rates, and the bias was still in favor of producers.

BREADSTUFFS.—Messrs. RICHARSON, SPENCE & Co. report all descriptions of Breadstuffs in the most limited demand, and nominally unchanged since Tuesday last, on which day, as already advised, Flour and Corn declined 6d.@1s., and Wheat 2d.@3d. The quotations are as follows: Flour, 23s.@28s.; red Wheat, 9s. 6d.@10s. 2d.; white, 9s. 6d.@11s. 9d. ₱ cental; yellow Corn, 31s.@32s. 6d., white, 35s.@38s. BIGLAND, ATHYA & Co. say that a further concession would be necessary to effect sales of American Wheat.

PROVISIONS.—Beef—Heavy arrivals paralyze the trade, and while there is much pressure to sell, the demand is quite limited, and prices are weak. Pork neglected, but unchanged in value. Bacon—New American is inquired for, and first arrivals will sell readily. Lard in fair demand at full prices. Sales 100 tons at 57s.@59s 6d. Tallow quiet, but prices maintained; Butchers Association nominally 58s.@59s.

PRODUCE.—The Brokers' Circular quotes sales of 150 bbls of Ashes at 27s. 3d.@27s. 6d. for both Pots and Pearls. Sugars in active demand at fully 6d. advance. Coffee dull and previous rates are not obtainable. RICE dull and drooping. RUM—Small sales of Philadelphia at 8s. 9d.@9s., and Baltimore at 7s. 6d. FISH OILS in limited request at unchanged prices. White Barged Sperm £96. Linseed OIL in good request at 28s.@29s. RESIN without material change; sales at 4s. 1d.@4s. 2d. for Common to good Common; 5s.@7s. 6d. for good Medium; and 11s.@12s. for fine. SPIRITS TURPENTINE dull at 33s. 6d.@34s. TEA very heavy at 1s. 2 1/2d.@1s. 2 3/4d. for common Congou. Other descriptions are 1/2d.@1d. cheaper—but Greens maintain their value.

LONDON MARKETS.

Messrs. BARING BROTHERS & Co. report the corn market less firm, and to sell it would be necessary to submit to a reduction of 1d.@2d. on White American 40s.@48s.; Red 44s.@46s. FLOUR 22s.@25s. IRON dull at £5 10 for both bars and rails. Scotch Pigs advanced to 55s. SUGARS in good demand, especially lower qualities, and prices advanced fully 6d. ₱ cwt. COFFEE firm. Jute 10s. ₱ ton dearer. Linseed further advanced 6d.@1s. Linseed Cakes in good demand. New-York £10; Boston £9 10s. Linseed OIL firm at 28s., on the spot, and 28s. 3d.@28s. 9d. for forward delivery. Fish OILS unchanged. RICE firm at unchanged figures. TALLOW quiet at 50s. 6d. TEA heavy, and common Congou 1/2d. down; sales at 1s. 2 3/4d.@1s. 2 1/4d. SPIRITS TURPENTINE 34s.@34s. 6d.

HAVRE MARKETS.

(For the week ending Nov. 22, inclusive.)

COTTON early in the week advanced 2f.@3f. on inferior, and 5f.@8f. on good descriptions, owing to the very limited stock on hand. Arrivals, however, subsequently took place, and prices became nominal. The quotations are: New-Orleans bas, 108f.; tres ordinaire, 113f. Sales of the week, 4,200 bales, exclusive of a considerable quantity in transitu. Stock on hand, 32,700 bales. BREADSTUFFS firm and rather dearer. POT ASHES firm, but Pearls scarce and steady. COFFEE unchanged. OILS dull but steady in price. RICE without alteration. SUGAR rather dearer and in steady demand. TALLOW has slightly advanced. WHALEBONE inactive.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

Messrs. D. BELL, SON & Co. report as follows: "There has been, during the past week, a steady demand for the various American State Stocks, and more inquiry for the better descriptions of Railroad Bonds, and prices are generally very firm:

United States 6 ₱ cent. Bonds, 1868	99 @101

THE LATEST BY THE PERSIA.

LONDON, Friday Evening, Nov. 25.

In the afternoon a decline of 1/8 per cent. took place in the funds, notwithstanding the increased firmness of the Paris Bourse. There was an active demand for money. The demand at the bank continues steady, but is not likely to increase materially so long as good bills are taken in other quarters at 2 1/2 per cent. The bullion opens at the bank to-day. The demand for bills on Holland, Frankfort and Hamburg continues, and prices were again lower. Other exchanges exhibit little alteration.

In the case of Paris, firmness was shown.

Times City Article, Friday evening—English funds open without alteration, and after a slight rise and fall returned to their first quotation. The demand for discount about the same as yesterday, very little done below 2 1/2 ₱ cent., a partial reaction this afternoon, all of the Railway stock closing 1/8 to 1/4 ₱ cent. lower.

Bank returns show an increase of £124,934 in stock of bullion. Wind southeast. Weather fine.

The Board of Trade Returns for the month of October were issued yesterday.

The aggregate exports of the month are returned at £449,076 more than in October, 1858, but £267,916 less than in October, 1857. Those for the ten months of the present year, however, have reached the unprecedented total of £108,755,184, being 12 per cent. more than last year, and 1 3/4 per cent. more than in 1857. The returns for the month show the activity lately witnessed in the exports. Cotton is not fully kept up; as regards linens, the amount is somewhat below the average, but the exports of woolens have suddenly and largely increased. There is also a rally in iron and haberdashery. Tin plates, silks and raw wool still figure on the unfavorable side.

The aggregate railway traffic of the United Kingdom for the week ending Nov. 19, shows an increase of £47,210 over the same week last year.

The Times, in its weekly review, says the produce markets have been firmer this week, and speculative inquiry has slightly increased. In Liverpool a further improvement in price is consequently observable, and transactions have taken place to a fair extent for export.

DISARMAMENT.

The Morning Post characterizes the recent Brussels telegram respecting a simultaneous disarmament by France and England as being absurd on the face.

Disarmament is the very last thing France could ask. The very last thing England could accede to—our armaments are not at all based upon any French preparations if we adopt measures of a defensive nature; they are undertaken as against all comers and against a combination of Powers. We do not vary in accordance with the varying strength of our neighbors.

The Post believes that the preliminaries which the English Government have considered necessary previous to the assembly of a Congress are in a fair way of settlement, and we may therefore look forward to the assembly of the Congress at no very distant date. The Times says the report in question was from the first only unworthy of attention.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Times, in a leader on the volunteer movement, says that if we are to have a really imposing force, it must be to a great extent consisting of men of the artizan class.

The Post, in a leader, treats upon the exclusion of Ireland from the act enabling volunteers to be enrolled.

The Times, in some remarks on recent and forthcoming meetings of the shipping interest, proposes to give the recondite meaning of these gatherings—it is not enough to drive out the Frenchmen and the Americans—British shipping means sailing ships, and on every principle of protection and prohibition, the sailing ship, being literally the weaker vessel, has a right to be protected against the formidable rivalry of screw steamers.

A marriage is arranged between Major-General Hon THOMAS ASHBURNHAM, brother of the Earl of ASHBURNHAM, and Miss FOLEY, sister of K. FOLEY.

Her Majesty's ship Wrangler returned to Woolwich yesterday, from an experimental cruise to try the 40-pound and 80-pound Armstrong gun at sea. A most complete course of experiments was carried out. Sixty rounds of ammunition with the elongated gun were fired with perfect success, and every experiment pertaining to the gun was pronounced faultless.

MAIL NEWS.

The Calcutta and China mails vid Marseilles will be delivered in London on Monday morning.

The Orissa with the heavy portion of the Bombay mails, passed First Castle, at 1 this morning.

The Cape Royal mail steamer Phabe, arrived at Plymouth yesterday morning, after a very fast passage of 34 days. She left Table Bay Oct. 22, St. Helena 31st, and Ascension Nov. 4.

Scene at the Dead-Letter Office.

VENDUE OF UNCLAIMED ARTICLES.

From the Washington Star, Dec. 7.

A stranger in the city would have been puzzled to account for the furious eagerness displayed last night by the crowd struggling to get into McGUIRE's auction-room. The fair sex was just as crazy as the men, and not a few ladies braved the mud and rain, and jostled at the door for admission in right good earnest. The attraction was the great "Dead-Letter Office Sale!" advertised for some weeks to take place on this night.

It was announced that the catalogue consisted of articles accumulated in the Dead Letter office since 1857, (the Department having used every effort to find the proper owners and being unable to do so,) and they would now be sold for the postage; the proceeds, if any, after paying charges, to be deposited in the United States Treasury, subject to order should the proper owners hereafter be found. The articles came from the Post-office in sealed packages, and no opportunity having thus been obtained of getting a peep of examination, the bidding was somewhat in the dark but generally spirited. The buyers naturally supposed that the articles thus sent by mail as pledges of affection must be about the correct thing in point of value.

The auctioneer said he would warrant nothing, as they wanted to close the thing up finally, but if he knew anything to be worthless he would intimate the fact when it was put up.

A very large proportion—perhaps three-quarters—of the articles were pieces of jewelry. Of these again a large proportion were finger-rings, there being no less than 500, many of them heavy plain gold wedding rings. Then there were earings in any quantity, gold pencils, bracelets, gold and silver watches, chains, lockets, fruit knives, breast-pins, studs, fob-chains, medals, etc., etc.

One of the lockets put up for sale, on being opened, was found to contain a miniature and was immediately withdrawn, as the Department reserves all portraits, not being allowed by the law to sell them.

There was quite a sprinkling of books: The Way to Heaven, Life and Speeches of Henry Clay, 2 vols.; Keeping the Heart, Fatalist, 100 Catechisms, Fort's Medical Practice, Stockton's Sermons, Missouri Harmony, African Preacher, Paradise Lost, Allyn's Ritual, Laws of Georgia, a dozen Catechisms, Fred Douglas, Sumner Family, Life of Fremont, Danger in the Dark, Green Book, Hymn Book, Flowers of Piety, Catholic Missal, Livingstone's Travels, five German Books, Cotton is King, Bay State Glee Book, &c., &c., &c.

Among the old things in the miscellany were an extraordinary pair of embroidered suspenders, (German style,) which sold for $1; 1 regalia, 5th degree, I. O. O. F., (brought $1 75;) patent inhaling tube, to cure consumption, (37 cents;) box dissecting instruments, case dicester, half a dozen chemises, [illegible] game fowl, 1 cornfield hoe, directed to "Queen Victoria," (the postage on which amounted to $18;) man pipes, gold foil, inkstands, kid gloves, spectacles, daguerreotype plates, violin strings, lot of mourning goods, 2 shawls and sacks, comfort, linen, braids (for colored persons,) black summer coat, bed quilt, ear trumpet, three pairs of boots, brogans, lot of hardware, sign on cotton cloth, "Ready-made Clothing;" lot of awls, 5 dozen watch crystals, and so on to the number of six or seven hundred articles.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The seventh annual report of the Public Library of Boston states that 10,154 persons have secured to themselves the use of the Library by registering their names, making in all 13,329 now upon the record of the institution. During the last ten months the circulation of books has been 149,468. With this immense circulation only 130 volumes are missing; and while some have been worn out in the service, but few have been wantonly defaced. The Library now contains 78,043 books, and 19,255 pamphlets, 3,405 books and 1,317 pamphlets having been presented, and 3,787 books having been bought during the present year. Among the gifts are 1,392 volumes presented by Mr. Bates, who has thus shown his continued interest in an institution which owes its existence to him. Included in his donation is a collection of about 500 volumes on the history and art of music, collected abroad with no little labor by Mr. A. W. Thayer, comprising rare works of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. 347 Chinese books have also been presented to the Library by Dr. Stanislaus Hernisz. The Trustees report that a further appropriation of $7,000 is required by the interests of the institution.

After remarking upon the growing prevalence of gambling throughout the country, under various disguises, the Cincinnati Gazette states that the amount of lottery tickets bought in that city is enormous. So important is the trade, that one person whose office was formerly located on Third-street, was a regular wholesale dealer in the tickets. He supplied the retail sellers of that and other Western cities, and is generally supposed to have made a snug little fortune out of his profits. It is believed that he is still in the city, wholesaleing these tickets, though his office has been removed. The retailers are numerous. Many of them have offices on Third-street, called Exchange Offices, where a little show of gold and silver, and uncurrent bank-notes in the window, is made as a "blind" to the real business of the establishment. Certain signs, well known to the initiated, (signs which we do not intend to describe,) indicate the real character of the "Exchange Office." Large sums of money are received at these establishments, and "policies" and tickets given in return, so, making an "exchange" of a certain sort. Very little of this money, it hardly need be said, ever comes back as "prizes."

The Southern Argus, Norfolk, Va., of the 5th inst., says: The new Baltimore iron steamer Winans, Capt. Vuaghan, arrived here as expected, on Saturday at 1 o'clock, and lies at the city wharf at Town Point, where she is visited by hundreds of our citizens anxious to see the strange-looking craft. She is entirely different in appearance from any other vessel afloat, and lies in the water like some great black sea monster with head and tail under water, and entirely concealed from view. Being of considerable size midway, and tapering off gradually, fore and aft, in shape she is compared quite aptly to a segar, and is also very like many a well-shaped sweet potato. We are informed by the Captain that the steamer's performances with regard to speed and general movements in the water are satisfactory and equal to the expectations of those on board. She is expected to go to sea to-day on a trial-trip.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, who has lately visited Richmond, writes from Mayfield, Ky., that while in Virginia he learned of a deeply laid scheme to capture J. R. Giddings, for the purpose of trying him for treason, &c., in view of his connection with the Harper's Ferry insurgents. This scheme is founded upon the reward offered recently, anonymously, for the bringing of his person to Virginia. This amount has been raised for this purpose, and the object will be to seize him and cross the line into Kentucky and Virginia immediately. The correspondent, who writes anonymously, says further: "I would have addressed Mr. Giddings directly, but do not know his post-office. I would advise him to be ever on his guard, and keep as far from the Ohio River as possible. I offer no apology for not giving my name, living as I do in the South."

A man named Joseph Callahan was tried in Augusta, Ga., recently, for negro stealing and found guilty. It appeared in evidence that Callahan had promised a negro belonging to Mr. Pardue that he would run him off and sell him three or four times, and divide the profits with him. The slave appeared to assent to the arrangement, but went forthwith and informed his master, who laid a plan to catch the rascal. Policemen were placed in a stable where Callahan was to meet the darkey, for it was a part of the scheme to steal a couple of mules also, and they overheard Callahan distinctly repeat the promise he had made. Then, when they took the mules out of the stable and were about to mount, Callahan was arrested. His punishment will probably not be a very light one.

Some one having written to Mrs. Swisshelm about Minnesota, she recounts some of the bad features of the State as follows: "First and foremost, moccasin politicians; second, mosquitoes, which bleed the settlers three months in the year; third, the water is so hard that one must break it with ashes before it will wash clothes; fourth, the men have taken to chewing tobacco, and they nearly all chew or smoke; fifth, apples are scarce; sixth, weeds grow very fast; seventh, sometimes the frost kills the squash vines before seeds are ripe; and these are all she can think of, except there is no coal—that the wood does not grow in stove length, but has all to be chopped.

There were registered in Rhode Island, last year 4,263 births, 1,438 marriages, and 2,616 deaths. The births were 237 more than in the year 1857; the deaths were 291 more; but the marriages were 88 less. Of the children born last year, 2,363 were children of American-born fathers, and 1861 of foreign-born fathers. Of the men married, 948 were natives of the United States, and 488 of other countries. Of the persons who died, 2,202 were natives of this country, and 378 of other countries; but only 1,428 were the children of American parents, 978 being of foreign parentage. There were 100 colored children born, and 83 deaths of colored persons.

Nathan Appleton, Henry J. Gardner, James W. Paige, Wm. Appleton, John T. Heard, James W. Sever, Francis Skinner, Chas. G. Greene, Peter Harvey, Edward Everett, and fourteen hundred others of the solid men of Boston, sign the following call for a Union meeting, which will be held to-day: "In view of the present disturbed condition of public sentiment, and the dangers which threaten our Union, the undersigned respectfully invite the citizens of Massachusetts, who honor and cherish that Union—who mean to maintain the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to carry out all its requirements and obligations, to meet with them at Faneuil Hall on Thursday, the 8th of December instant, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Recently a man named William Grooms was arrested at his residence in Beallsville, Washington County, Penn., on a warrant issued by Judge Slagle, under the act of 1842, to answer a charge of fraud, which consisted in his twice selling his interest in the estate left by his father, in Greene County. He was taken to Washington, and was permitted to lodge at the Fulton House over night on parole of honor, the hearing before the Judge having been fixed for Saturday morning; but he did not make his appearance at the time indicated, and, on inquiry being made, it was ascertained that he had decamped some time during the night.

In Nantucket, Mass., Dec. 4, Mr. George H. Coleman, about 25 years of age, son of Capt. Eben Coleman, but recently a resident of New-York, had a pair of pistols which he was engaged in cleaning, and had loaded one and laid it on the table. His sister, who had been in the room with him, retired for a few moments, and during her absence heard the report of a pistol, and on returning to the room found her brother shot through the heart. No cause can be assigned for the act, which is, therefore, presumed to have been the result of accident.

In September last the barn of Mr. Lee, in Litch field, (Ohio), was burned and three horses with it, while four others were stolen and run off. Mr. Lee overtook the thief, who proved to be one John Watson, with the horses in Wooster. He has just been tried, and sentenced to six years imprisonment. The Medina Gazette says: "The conduct of the defendant during the progress of the trial evinced to many present that he did not act like a sane person. He seemed to exult that so many persons had come to hear his trial, and to view the whole proceeding as a mark of favor, of which he was the distinguished recipient."

Edward C. Dana, one of the convicts who escaped from the Auburn Prison on Thursday last, was brought back Dec. 2, by E. M. Sperry, Esq., of Fleming, Cayuga County. The convict delivered himself up to Mr. Sperry, and had almost perished with cold and hunger. He states that he, with the others, had traveled all night without food or rest, and supposed that they had gone a distance of thirty or forty miles, but in the morning found themselves in sight of Auburn; and he being worn out, and thinking that prison life was preferable to being hungry and cold, delivered himself up. Mr. Sperry took only $25 of the reward, generously leaving the remainder ($25) for the convict on his release.

Herr Driesbach, the lion-tamer, has given a certificate to R. C. Russ, editor of the Brownsville (Ky.) Journal, stating that he is the only man in the country, excepting those engaged in taming wild animals, who has had the nerve to follow him into the cage of the lion and take a seat on his back. The certificate to this effect was written by Mr. Russ while in the interesting situation referred to. He remarks, "We don't think that we shall again try the experiment soon, feeling satisfied that it is the better part of wisdom to keep out of danger when there is no good cause for getting in; not wishing to become lionized at the expense of our life."

A middle-aged foreigner named Richard Graham, while on one of the Morris and Essex trains, as it was nearing the East Newark depôt, at about 5 o'clock Monday afternoon, recognized a friend near the track to whom he wished to speak. He accordingly sprung from the train and was hurled headlong to the ground, breaking his skull. He was picked up insensible and taken to Newark, where he soon died from his injuries. Deceased was a man of temperate habits, and had been employed at the Bergen tunnel.

Two Frenchmen, on the 1st inst., entered a house, at the door of which a lady was standing, and as they passed, one of them caught her by the neck, pushed her in and held her, while his accomplice searched the place. They found nothing, however, available to take away, and left. She was so frightened that she alarm for some time[illegible] about a square, where they [illegible] and took away a gold watch, [illegible] given and the thieves were pursued, but effected capture.

One great secret of the speed of Flora Temple (the fastest trotting horse in the world) has been discovered. It has been found by measurement that her stride—small as the animal herself is—is "equal to that of a sixteen-hand horse." She wins by her long, low, locomotive style of going, which works with the saving exactitude of machinery, and wastes no power in unnecessary action, or in what is more graphically termed "style."

A gas explosion at the blast furnace in Fort Edward on Friday morning, injured the works to the extent of about $600. The village paper says: "The exact cause or origin of the explosion we are unable to explain, but the report was like a cannon, and the bellows-room was pretty well riddled. The person who had charge of the bellows had a narrow escape for his life. The accident will not prevent the furnace from working as usual, but less iron will be made."

The clerks in the St. Louis Post-office "struck" and quit work on Saturday, Dec. 3, because the office was not decently warmed, the Treasury Department at Washington refusing to authorize or furnish the necessary heating apparatus. The citizens had to wait twenty-four hours for their mail matter, in consequence, and would have been compelled to wait still longer, but for the fact of the Postmaster taking upon himself the responsibility of putting up stoves, and then telegraphing the fact to Washington.

A clergyman in St. Louis was lately fleeced out of one hundred dollars by a man and woman. The latter pretended to be in distress, and the clergyman accompanied her to her residence, where she related a pathetic story of griefs and miseries. He pulled out his pocket-book to give her some money, when she snatched it and a scuffle ensued. Her accomplice then rushed in and drove the clergyman from the house, after getting his pocket-book.

Thomas Slaughter, a colored saloon keeper in Detroit, has recently married a Scotch girl in the same city. The Desdemona of this disgusting affair is but 16 years of age, and is said to be a very fair looking girl. She has a husband living in the interior of the State, whose name is Green. Slaughter has a colored wife, and neither party has been divorced. Elder Berry, who performed the marriage ceremony, has been arrested.

Ten slaves, five males and five females, ran off from Lagrange, Mo., on Monday week. They stole a flat-boat and crossed the Mississippi River into Illinois. On Friday night, another negro, owned in the same place, also effected his escape, making eleven in all. There were six slaves lodged in jail at Cambridge, Md., last Monday. They were detected in making an attempt to run away.

The Philadelphia Ledger mentions a singular fact in connection with the recent coal-oil discoveries in Pennsylvania. In many places in the Valley of Oil Creek the ground is covered with pits, hundreds and thousands of them, evidently dug for the purpose of gathering oil, and at a period so remote that trees 250 years old are growing over them. The query is, by whom were these pits dug, and for what purpose was the oil gathered?

Dr. John Green, of Worcester, has presented to that city his library, now in the possession of the Lyceum and Library Association, for a public library; and the Lyceum and Library Association have generously made the same disposal of their collection. The library of Dr. Green contains 7,000 volumes, selected with great care, and at a cost of about $12,000. That of the Association contains 4,500 volumes.

A sale of the Philadelphia Ledger building, and the building known as the "Quincy Granite Building," No. 311 Chestnut-street, took place Monday evening, under a writ of partition for the settlement of an estate. The building at the corner of Third and Chestnut streets was sold for the sum of $75,100 cash. The other brought $46,600—also cash; making a total of $121,700.

Dr. John Green, of Worcester, Mass., has presented to that city his library, now in the possession of the Lyceum and Library Association, for a public library; and the Lyceum and Library Association have generously made the same disposal of their collection. The library of Dr. Green contains seven thousand volumes, selected with great care, and at a cost of $12,000.

In conformity to the usual custom, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, with his associates, Judges Nelson, Grier, Clifford and Campbell, called upon President Buchanan on Monday. Vice-President Breckinridge, and a large number of private individuals also paid their respects to the President on the occasion of the opening of Congress.

Eight inches of snow fell in the White Mountain districts on Sunday, Dec. 4, and the day was very cold. Saturday last was the coldest day of the season among the mountains. At sunrise the mercury stood at only five degrees above zero, and it did not rise above ten degrees throughout the day. At the last accounts, the mountaineers had fine sleighing and skating.

Mr. Witham, residing at Embden, Me., on Thursday last threatened to kill his wife and her father and mother, because his wife had left him in a quarrel. He took aim with a rifle at his father-in-law, who seized hold of the weapon just in time to turn it aside when it was discharged, and no injury was done. Witham was arrested and held for trial.

John Reed died recently at Liberty, Ohio, of an injury received on the previous evening at a corn-husking. At the close of the husking the young folks engaged in a wrestling match, and while two were thus engaged, the one threw the other around so that his feet struck the deceased, who was standing by, in the abdomen, causing his death the following day.

The catalogue of Wabash College, Indiana, for 1860, states the whole number of students in attendance at that institution at 156. They are divided as follows: Seniors, 4; Juniors, 12; Sophomores, 14; Freshmen, 26: Preparatory, second year, 34; first year, 26; Normal, second year, 19; first year, 21.

Lawrence Academy, at Groton, has recently come into the possession of $30,000, which was bequeathed by the late William Lawrence, Esq., of this City. The original sum was $20,000, and the remainder is the result of interest. The productive fund of the institution is now more than $60,000.

A bill for the extension of time to the San Antonio and Mexican Gulf Railroad has passed the Texas Senate to the second reading. The extension of time asked is until the 1st day of January, 1862, and that there is to be completed 75 miles of said road by the 1st day of January, 1862. There will be no difficulty in getting the bill through the House.

The citizens of Lawrence, (Kansas) and vicinity have contributed land, city lots and money, estimated at $20,000, towards the erection of the proposed Monumental College. Amos A. Lawrence, of Boston, has given $14,000—on condition that $20,000 more are contributed, which will soon be done probably.

A public meeting was to have been held at Marshall, Texas, on Saturday, the 26th ult., for the purpose of taking action and giving public expression in reference to persons capable of uttering, writing, or in any manner whatever promulgating sentiments incendiary or dangerous in their character to existing Southern institutions.

Messrs. Samuel H. Walley and Jacob Sleeper, the Receivers appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court to examine the accounts of Isaac F. Shepard, late Treasurer of the People's Five Cent Savings Bank of Boston, have submitted their report. It shows that the entire deficit runs up to $57,000.

It was discovered in Philadelphia, last week that a young man who was convicted of an outrage on a little girl, in November, and sentenced to the Penitentiary for seven years, was arrested and convicted under a mistaken identity.

A public meeting of the members and friends of the Presbyterian Church of Canada in connection with the Church of Scotland, was held at Montreal, Dec. 5, for the purpose of devising measures for the establishment of a General Home Mission scheme.

The female teachers of two of the Public Schools of Washington have remonstrated to the Trustees against the use of Lorring's History of the United States as a text-book, on the ground that it is too complicated for study in the schools.

Rev. T. L. Breckenridge, a Baptist clergyman in Lafayette, Ind., has preached a sermon extolling the act of John Brown. His congregation is the largest and wealthiest in the city.

At Newcastle, Del., John J. Bowen has been convicted of the murder of John W. Dewlin in Delaware City. The prisoner's mother and sister sat by him in Court during the trial.

The office of State Printer, in Texas, has been abolished by the Legislature, and the work is to be put out to the lowest bidder.

The Legislature of Texas has refused to vote an appropriation to provide newspapers for its members.

The colored people of Montreal have subscribed $65 for the benefit of John Brown's family.

CANADIAN POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS.—The Toronto Leader says: "A short time ago we announced the conclusion, by Postmaster-General Smith, of an important Postal arrangement with the United States Government. We are now happy to have it in our power to add that this arrangement has received the ratification of the Imperial Government. Mr. Sarra, as we announced at the time, went to England to bring this about; and his success has been as great there as it was at Washington. Under the engagement entered into, we are to carry the Western United States Mails between Detroit and Liverpool, viâ Portland in Winter, and viâ Riviere du Loup in Summer. The eastern section of the Grand Trunk Railroad thus becomes of greater importance than had been anticipated; there will be a saving of time by using the railroad instead of the steamers between Quebec and Riviere du Loup.

Canada is to receive the full ocean rate on the Western United States correspondence, for the service she is to perform; while she foregoes the inland rate of postage upon it, as do also the Americans the internal postage on Canadian letters, between Portland and the Province line. The Americans are to have, between the Cunard and the Canadian lines of steamers, a bi-weekly communication with Europe. The United States mails are to leave Chicago on Thursday mornings; and on reaching Detroit, the same day, they are to be transferred to the Grand Trunk Railway, by which they will be carried to Portland on Saturday, in time for the sailing of the steamer. Letters between Liverpool and Chicago will be carried in twelve days by this route. Special trains will leave London on Wednesday, and not on Tuesday, as heretofore; and the mails will be shipped at Cork during the Winter. By this arrangement there will be a saving of a day."

THE SAVINGS BANK DEFALCATION IN BOSTON.—The Receivers of the Five Cents Savings Bank in Hanover-street, have made their first report to the Supreme Court, of which we present a summary in another column. It will be seen that the deficiency reported is $57,011 94, not all attributable to the defalcation of Mr. SHEPHARD, however, but partly resulting from bad investments. The amount taken by the defaulting treasurer is not stated. The affairs of the Bank have been very loosely managed, and from present appearances the loss to depositors will be from 20 to 25 per cent.—Boston Journal Dec. 6.

LAW REPORTS.

GENERAL SESSIONS.

Conviction of Gordon, the Emigrant-runner, for Assault.

No witnesses having been summoned on Tuesday, nothing of importance took place in this Court on Wednesday, but yesterday the regular business, temporarily interrupted by the election, was resumed, before Recorder BARNARD.

John Gordon, alias Stephen Gordon, an emigrant-runner, charged with assault and battery on a Frenchman named Jean Dulaurie, on the 29th August, was placed on trial. Dulaurie testified, through an interpreter, that he arrived in this port, on that day, from Key West, intending to take passage for Europe in a steamer; that he purchased a ticket through the defendant's agency, and found that, instead of a ste

NEWS OF THE DAY.

There is to be no message this week. The Senate yesterday, after listening to a discussion that ever-fresh and sufficient topic, Slavery, adjourned until Monday. The discussion was not without points of interest. Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, having the floor upon his amendment to Mr. Mason's resolution, spoke at great length and with much force in defence of the Republican platform; yet in a sense so moderate and conservative as to disarm the attacks of the more ultra Southern Senators. He denied that Slavery was a crime, where it existed under the protection of the laws; and admitted that it not only so existed in the Slave States, but also in the District of Columbia. As to the admission of new Slave States into the Union, he expressed his readiness to vote for them, whenever they presented themselves; and was at pains to repudiate the name of Mr. Seward as the leader of the Republican Party. Gen. Davis, of Mississippi, and Mr. Wilson, of Massachusetts, followed. In the House, the honors of the day devolved mainly upon two representatives from Ohio, Messrs. Corwin and Cox. Mr. Corwin made a speech almost, in outline, the counterpart of that of Mr. Trumbull, in the Senate; eulogizing Virginia and South Carolina; disclaiming all hostility to Slavery, or any design to exclude slave States, and repudiating Mr. Seward. Mr. Cox, in rejoinder, could not accept the professions of Mr. Corwin as the creed of the Republicans of Ohio, especially of those in the Western Reserve. He claimed that with the exception of that infected region Ohio was eminently sound and conservative. The House, without attempting a third ballot for Speaker, adjourned.

The intelligence from Europe brought by the Persia, which arrived yesterday with dates to Nov. 26, is of subordinate interest. The question of a Congress remained undecided. It was rumored that conditions preliminary had been propounded by England, which were unacceptable to the French and Austrian Governments; and that for the present the call had been withheld. These rumors the Times discredits, and the Post, speaking semi-officially, says the British requirements are in a fair way of adjustment, and that the assembling of the Congress may be looked for immediately. Another story to the effect that the return of Lord Cowley to London, from his post as Ambassador at Paris, had for its object a proposition for a simultaneous disarmament of France and England, is also pronounced fictitious. Better feelings, in the meantime, had sprung up between the two countries, and while the belligerent preparations and popular drill are prosecuted with unrelenting vigor throughout the United Kingdom, there is no longer an urgent apprehension of war. The condition of Italy remains unaltered. The new fortifications of Bologna are urged forward with energy; Gen. Fanti, in a recent order of the day, exhorts his Central Army to renewed patriotism, courage, and vigilance; Gen. Garibaldi was at Nice. A circular note from the Sardinian Government, addressed to its diplomatic agents, states the ground taken by the Court of Turin, in reference to the Regency question, and prefigures the policy it designs to pursue. Contemporaneously with this manifesto, appears another from the Tuscan authorities, uttering an eloquent and menacing protest against any attempt of the Congress to restore the deposed Dukes. From India, we learn that the reported death of the Nena is doubted, the rumor being regarded as a ruse of the adroit rebel. Severe storms had visited the Southern Coast of Africa. In the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope ten first-class vessels are reported as lost.

The meeting of Massachusetts men, to disavow all sympathy with the aims of John Brown, and to reassure the South, was most respect-worthy in names and numbers, was held in Faneuil Hall, Ex-Governor Lincoln presided. A throng of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries, among whom were four other Ex-Governors of the State assisting. The resolutions were cogently to the point, as were also the addresses. The principal speech of the occasion was that of Mr. Edward Everett, who spoke at length, repeating many of his standard Union phrases, but pleading earnestly and eloquently against the dangerous tendencies of the day. Among other sympathetic letters received from distinguished citizens of New-England, was one from Ex-President Pierce, denunciatory of the actual agitation and its cause.

From Hayti we learn that a public sale was to be made of the confiscated property of the Ex-Emperor Soulouque, as well as of that of his Minister, Delva, in order to reimburse, as far as possible, the immense sums which these persons had abstracted from the royal treasury. A Commission had been sent to relieve those who had suffered by the late severe gales on the coast. Lotteries and Insurance Companies with profane titles had been established, and a bank with a capital of five million dollars had been chartered. Much satisfaction was expressed with the course the Government had thus far pursued.

The Comptroller sent a communication to the Board of Councilmen, giving a summary of expenditures on City accounts, and also upon the several Trust and Special accounts, from Jan. 1, 1859, to Nov. 30, ult., amounting in the aggregate to sixteen million three hundred and sixty-two thousand three hundred and ninety-six dollars and forty-five cents. The Aldermen held a session as a Board of City Canvassers, and made some progress in revising the returns of the Municipal election.

In the action brought by Mr. E. C. Benedict to recover for professional services rendered as counsel on the trial of a cause, the jury have rendered a verdict for plaintiff for $250; the amount of his bill as rendered to the defendants. The case of Walter W. Price vs. Spencer H. Smith, a suit brought to establish plaintiff's title to the Colonelcy of the First Regiment, was brought to trial, yesterday, before Justice James, of the Supreme Court, at Circuit, but no decision was rendered. In the case of Charles Goodyear against Horace H. Day, heard on Tuesday, before Judge Ingersoll, in the United States Circuit Court, in which the former asked for an injunction to restrain Day from prosecuting any suits against venders or manufacturers of certain kinds of elastic woven rubber goods until a final decree shall be rendered by the Court determining the exclusive right to such goods, an order was granted postponing the hearing until the 17th inst., and declaring that if said Day, in the meantime, "do any of the acts or things sought to be enjoined, the complainant may renew his motion for injunction, as aforesaid." In the Court of General Sessions, business, which was temporarily suspended by the election, was actively resumed, Recorder Barnard presiding. Of several cases disposed of, the most important was that of the emigrant runner, Gordon, indicted for a violent assault on a Frenchman, Delaurie, by whom he was accused of fraud in the selling a ticket for a passage to Europe. He was readily convicted.

Capt. W. T. Lynch, before the Kane Monument Association, at Cooper Institute, lectured on the commercial importance of the East, and the necessity of a new and more direct route, hinting that a commercial necessity might bring about a revivification of the Holy Land and the restoration of the Jews.

The stock market was firmer yesterday, owing partly to the English advices by the steamship Persia, and partly to the returning ease in money at 6 per cent. on temporary loan. There was a rise of 4 per cent. on Illinois Central shares. New-York Central sold at 80½, and closed 80⅞.

Cotton was purchased to the extent of 5,000 bales, chiefly in transitu. Prices were steady. Flour and Wheat were less sought after, especially by shippers. Light receipts and cold weather, however, had the effect of checking the downward tendency of the market. The transactions in other kinds of Breadstuffs were limited. Provisions were freely dealt in. Pork closed lower. A moderate inquiry prevailed for Groceries, Spirits Turpentine, Whisky, Hay, Hops, Tallow and Linseed Oil. The Freight engagements were fair.

The Temper of Virginia.

If any one doubts the substantial insanity of the State of Virginia, we commend him to a perusal of an article which we copy in another column, from the Richmond Examiner. That journal speaks of it as an "able and interesting communication,"—from the pen "of one of the most accomplished gentlemen and gifted writers of the South, whose articles are always both instructive and valuable." So far as style goes the article is well enough:—but its picture of evils, and its suggestion of remedies indicate nightmare, rather than healthy digestion and practical common sense.

The writer represents the entire North as "crazed on the subject of Slavery." He evidently believes that the great mass of our people are rabid, ultra-Abolitionists—eager to march with arms in our hands into the Southern States, for the violent emancipation of their slaves, and frenzied with delight at John Brown's invasion, and with melancholy horror at its failure! It seems impossible that any human being should live in so secluded a region of the earth, as to be thus ignorant of the state of things here, and thus torment himself with the fearful shapes of his own imagination. But anything is possible in Virginia now-a-days. While their own local papers so sedulously misrepresent and falsify the facts of Northern life and opinion,—while their Governor gives these misstatements the weight of his official authority, and the only Northern papers allowed to circulate are those which live by the agitation and alarm they can create, it is idle to hope for anything like sanity of thought or wisdom of action on the part of their people.

But the remedy which this "able and distinguished" Virginian suggests may, possibly, startle his own constituents into the suspicion that their fears are wrecking judgment and common sense. He proposes to invite the Emperor of France to send his army and navy hither, and take the Southern States under his protection! He would prefer such an arrangement with England, which is the "natural ally of the South;" but fears the cant and fanaticism of her Queen would render such an alliance impossible. From Louis Napoleon, however, nothing of the sort is to be apprehended. He is ready for anything. He is obliged to keep an immense army and navy on foot, and needs employment for them. He will be very glad to "lend them to the South and maintain them at his own expense, in exchange for the freedom of Southern trade." And this is the bargain which this "able and accomplished" Southern statesman proposes to make. The South is to be held by French troops,—maintained at French expense,—occupying Southern forts, and protecting the South, by sea and land, against the North! He thinks the offer of Free-Trade would secure these immense advantages to the South. We venture to suggest that the South could procure them at a much cheaper rate. Louis Napoleon will probably be very glad to take possession of the South gratuitously. Despotic masters of armies do not generally require to be bribed into making conquests, or seduced by large rewards into taking possession of large and fertile tracts of land. Even the North—hard, barren, fanatical and unattractive as it is, could possibly induce Louis Napoleon or Queen Victoria into a similar act of beneficence, without giving anything like the price which the Examiner's correspondent proposes to pay. He consoles himself for the degradations of such a surrender by the reflection that it would "cause grass to grow in the streets of New-York." Suppose it should; how would Virginia be benefited by such a consummation? It might for the moment gratify her resentment, but it would not lighten her burdens, nor reconcile her people to the military despotism they would have voluntarily fastened upon their necks.

We have neither shown, nor felt any disposition hitherto to under-estimate the apprehensions of the Southern people, or to ridicule the alarm which their misconceptions of Northern sentiment have been so well calculated to excite. So long as they believe that the whole North sympathizes with John Brown's invasion, it is perfectly natural that they should feel excited and indignant. If the fact were so, they would be perfectly justified in declaring war against the North instantly. But we have confidently trusted that time and better information would disabuse their minds of these utterly false impressions—that they would perceive ere long that the North is not hostile to their rights, or disposed either to wage or countenance any warfare on their peace or their welfare; and that they would then return to their accustomed moderation and fairness of judgment. Such propositions as this in the Examiner, we hope, will arrest the attention of the conservative portion of the South, and lead them to consider into what perilous shoals and quicksands of insanity they are allowing the Southern public mind to drift.

Dangerous Powers.

Granting everything that Postmaster-General Holt says in his recent letter, touching the transmission of incendiary publications by mails, of the right of the States to pass laws prohibiting the postmasters from distributing books, newspapers or pamphlets tending to excite slaves to insurrection, we must say the power which he claims for the postmasters is, in our opinion, one with which no postmaster should be armed. The persons who fill that office now throughout the country are rarely men whose education qualifies them to exercise a censorship of the Press, either with judgment or discretion. They are not selected with reference to anything but their electioneering abilities, and to charge such people with the duty of examining all the books and papers which citizens of the United States may have sent to them, and of deciding which they shall receive, is more than ridiculous. If it has become necessary to inspect the printed matter arriving at the various post-offices in the Slave States before distribution, provision should be made for having it done by regularly appointed censors, men of education and character, appointed by the State, and not by the Federal Government, and responsible to their fellow-citizens for the proper exercise of these functions.

Fancy such functionaries as are appointed to office now-a-days, being charged by law with the inspection of the mail-matter addressed to everybody in their districts, and being at liberty to retain and destroy without accountability, any portion of it they please. If we borrow the precautions of [illegible] ment, we should also, at least [illegible] in the selection of those whom it charges with their maintenance.

The Doings of Congress.

Congress seems to have converted itself into a debating club of agitators. As no organization has been effected no business can be done. The debate into which both branches have plunged so unceremoniously can have no higher practical object, therefore, than to free the minds of individuals, settle points of political position and feed the flame of sectional excitement throughout the country. It is possible that some members may persuade themselves that they are in this way promoting the harmony and stability of the Union;—but it is much more likely that many of them are neither doing, nor seeking to do, any such thing.

Mr. Mason's resolution in the Senate ought to have been passed promptly and without objection from any quarter. It is an eminently proper resolution, and the inquiry which it calls for ought to be entered upon forthwith. The debate, however, which has been had upon it may have the effect of defining the positions of individual Senators and of clearing the political atmosphere of some of the poisonous vapors with which it was charged.

In the House, the discussion is useless and factious. Some two or three years ago, a gentleman named Helper, from North Carolina, wrote a book on Slavery,—ostensibly in the interest of the non-slaveholding whites of the Southern States,—pointing out their depressed condition, and designed to stir them up to measures of redress and relief. Soon after the Presidential election, sundry Republicans conceived the design of making this book a campaign document, and they therefore subscribed considerable sums of money for the publication of a campaign edition, and signed a certificate of its interest and value as a book of popular instruction on the subject which it discussed. For a year or two neither the book nor the movement attracted any particular attention. Nobody denounced it—nobody thought it worth while to arraign those who had recommended it as incendiaries or traitors, and the book was producing no perceptible effect anywhere.

But quite recently the Herald has been engaged, with its accustomed zeal and industry, in the pleasant and patriotic task of proving that the whole North is a vast hive of Abolition conspirators,—that John Brown's crusade was prompted, aided and indorsed by thousands and tens of thousands of our most prominent and active business and public men, and that the South must expect to be speedily overrun by armed hordes from the Northern States. When the carpet-bag of Brown and the leather trunk of Col. Forbes gave out, the Herald hunted up this dead and forgotten book of Mr. Helper, and galvanized it into mischievous life. The Members of Congress who have plunged into this discussion are simply eking out the half-finished work of the Herald, with some little additions of their own. All that journal sought to accomplish was to plunge the community into commotion, still further to alarm and excite the South, and to raise a row generally. Its accomplices at Washington have the additional motive of trying to prevent the election of a Republican Speaker.

The Congressional indorsers of this book are certainly in a dilemma. None, so far, have had the courage to avow their approval of its sentiments. Most of them aver that they signed because they were asked, and without reading the document to which they put their names. They deserve punishment for their heedlessness if not for their heresy. The incident may teach them the folly of the practice which has become so common, of signing papers merely out of good-nature, and without knowing their contents.

That Cloven Foot.

The Tribune is a little startled by a glimpse of "the cloven foot." Naturally enough,—and it will be still more so when it comes fully to understand whose leg the "foot" in question belongs to. It is alarmed even at the hint that its adroit scheme for the election of Fernando Wood, in order to break down Tammany Hall, may possibly end in consolidating the two factions and making the Democratic Party more formidable than ever. Playing with edge-tools is pleasant enough, but it is desirable for beginners always to keep the handle in their own hands. Fernando is not the safest of partners, and whoever attempts to eat porridge with him should have a long spoon. He has secured what he wanted from the Republican Party,—a vigorous and active support of their own candidate. This gave him his election as Mayor, and has secured him complete supremacy in the Democratic Party, as well as complete control of the power and patronage of the City. He probably now considers himself capable of taking care of himself.

We can relieve our neighbor on one point. Our information which so startles him, was not official, and may prove to be incorrect. We are not the organ of Tammany Hall, nor have we the remotest shadow of authority to speak for its "virtuous Havemeyers or its orators." They do not deserve the outpouring of wrath to which the Tribune treats them, on the strength of anything we have said or done. They are just as independent of us as we are independent of them. We know nothing of their plans and purposes and have never assumed to disclose either. Our opinion of the Tammany organization is probably just about the same as that entertained by our shocked and startled neighbor. We consider it a corrupt combination of unscrupulous political partisans—quite capable of all the wickedness which the Tribune lays to its charge, and very likely, now that it is defeated, to enter into such a fraternal alliance with Mayor Wood as that at which we hinted the other day. There are individuals among them who are incapable of anything of the kind—just as there are individual Republicans incapable of aiming at the election of Wood in order to damage the Democracy and promote their own party ends. But as a party power we have not the remotest faith in Tammany, or the slightest suspicion of its high-minded devotion to the public good. And therefore it is that we suspect it of the design of astonishing the Tribune some day, by revealing to the astute innocents of that partisan concern, the startling fact of Democratic harmony perfectly restored and consolidated by the reelection of Mayor Wood.

One thing more, and we have done. We supported Mr. Havemeyer in the late election, not as the nominee of Tammany Hall, nor on account of his character and position as a party candidate; but as an honest man, who would make a good City officer, and who would in all probability receive more votes than Mr. Opdyke, and therefore stand the best chance of defeating Wood. We do not expect to satisfy the Tribune of the [illegible]ness of our motives in this matter,—for [illegible] seems quite incapable of conceiving how a newspaper can be independent of parties, or how a man may act in a city election purely with regard to city interests and without reference to Slavery, Kansas or the Presidential election. This is a matter, however, of little consequence. But we may safely appeal to the result, in vindication of the propriety of our course and the wisdom of our advice.

The Virginia Schemes of Revenge.

We published, yesterday, a number of resolutions passed at meetings held in various Counties of Virginia, to determine upon plans of punishing the North for its alleged participation in the Harper's Ferry insurrection. We have said, over and over again, what everybody who knows anything of the North understands perfectly well, that it is no more responsible for Brown's attempt than the South is responsible for Gen. Walker's forays in Nicaragua. A good many people here admired Brown, and a good many people there admired Walker; but it is about as reasonable to charge every Northerner with inciting slaves to rebel as to charge every man at the South with piracy. We might multiply parallels of this sort ad infinitum, if it were of any use. But our assertions, as well as the plain facts of the case, seem to have about as much influence in the minds of Virginians, in their present temper, as the assurances of a nurse that the cow won't bite her, upon that of a terrified child. We have exhausted argument, protestation, and proof in clearing our skirts of complicity in this affair, and what to do next to put an end to the anxieties with which Virginians are afflicted, we hardly know.

The inability to devise any mode of vindicating ourselves, leaves us, however, ample leisure to reflect upon the odd modes of self-protection upon which our Virginian friends have lighted, as set forth in the proceedings of these county meetings.

The object of these meetings is, evidently in a very small degree, the protection of slave property. The main design of them all is the punishment of the North. What the North has done, we are, as we have said, entirely unable to state; but that Virginia disapproves of it in toto, and seems determined to make us smart for it, there can be no question. We have, however, looked through the resolutions with some care, and are, we confess, unable to discover a trace of any design, the execution of which will cause anybody the least inconvenience except the Virginians themselves. As far as we can judge from this long string of threats and denunciations, their mode of avenging themselves on their enemies is very like the Japanese mode of punishing an insult. It is the custom in that Empire for individuals whose feelings are hurt, to rip themselves up before the eyes of the offender, who is expected instantly to follow their example. There can be no question of the completeness of the vengeance if the wrongdoer can be got to fulfill his part in the transaction; but the risk of his failing to do execution upon himself, it must be admitted is an awful risk for those whom he injures. Our Virginian friends have their knives sharpened, and seem determined to punish their foes, but it is apparently by the mutilation of their own persons. They are devising an elaborate system of self damage without the smallest guarantee that it will be anything but self damage; and in our humble opinion it will be simply that and nothing more. None of the plotters against their peace will rip themselves open.

Vigilance Committees are being formed in every county to impede intercourse, arrest travelers, and persons suspected of holding Anti-Slavery opinions, and try them by Lynch law: in other words, to paralyze trade and commerce, and lower the value of property by introducing into their own country all the vexations of war in a time of profound peace, by diffusing a general feeling of insecurity—by surrounding daily acts of life with terrors and restrictions and misgivings—by, in short, putting into full activity every one of the abuses and abominations which make real estate sell in Naples for two-thirds of what it brings in Sardinia, and which finally drive away every man who places any value either on liberty or law. It would be amusing, if it were not melancholy to witness the simplicity of the Virginian committees, who fancy that by making their own roads impassable by the aid of patrols and passports, they are thus striking a blow at New-York.

Another of the suicidal features of these resolutions is the determination to tax heavily anybody who imports Northern goods, for sale in Virginia, or any Company which purchases a steam-engine or freight car in a non-slaveholding State. If these desperate measures are carried out, the result will simply be that the Virginians will pay more for their clothes, and crockery, and furniture than any other people in the Union. It is insane to suppose that anything would be known of differential duties imposed by Virginia alone in New-York or Massachusetts, except what would be learned from the newspapers. If the whole South united in passing non-intercourse laws, the effect would certainly be formidable; but a tax of $500 a year upon any Virginian shopkeeper who sold Northern goods would afflict nobody but Virginians. To suppose that Virginia herself can just now open up a brisk direct trade with Europe, and establish an emporium for foreign goods as cheap, as well-supplied and as varied, as that of New-York or Philadelphia, is as reasonable as to suppose that A. T. Stewart could make his store pay in Harper's Ferry. In so far as the stock to be had in Richmond would be inferior to that to be had in New-York, the Virginians, and they alone, would be the losers. If it gives them any satisfaction to testify their devotion to Slavery by raising the price of their clothing, and rendering their homes uncomfortable, it is, of course, their own affair. But we may be allowed at least in the name of common sense, to protest against the spectacle which they seem disposed to afford us, of a great State making a fakir of itself in honor of a god, whose claims to veneration are, to say the least, doubtful, and of whose right to exact the worship of self-torture there can be no question whatever.

The Post and Express.

The contrast between the stupidity of the Post and the vivacity of the Express in this country is one of the most astonishing features of our social life. While our Government is slowly and painfully working itself up to something like the ghost of an attempt to rival the splendid modern development of the mail system in Europe, a few enterprising individuals have originated, put into shape and perfected a scheme of internal communication between the remotest sections of the country which defies comparison with any similar institution in the world.

Our national Post-office with its cumbrous machinery, its proverbial irregularity and its increasing expense, shows by the side of the Post-offices of France and England very much like the ox-teams of a mediæval army by the side of the steam fleets which poured the Western Allies upon the Crimea, or the Railway trains which thundered down upon the field of Montebello, with their freight of bayonets and rifles. Our expresses girdling the Continent, delivering the gold of California in New-York, and moving the household gods of the New-England emigrant, as swiftly as his person, from Maine to Minnesota, have extracted the maximum of speed, safety and punctuality from the great net-work of highways with which the surface of the United States has, in the last few years, become netted. The one is the amazement and the shame of our people; the other a brilliant triumph of all the qualities which have made us so mighty in material things.

Now that Congress has assembled, professedly, at least, for the purpose of attending to the practical business of the country, we trust that some public-spirited legislator will seize a moment of lull in the war of sectional recriminations, to insist upon an inquiry into the causes of the vast difference to which we here call attention. It has been often urged that the length and desolateness of our mail routes in the least cultivated regions of the South and West, must be suffered to account for many imperfections in our postal administration. But apart from the very obvious consideration that the mere fact of a single horseman's being employed to carry a mail-bag twice a week over a hundred miles of croaking swamp in Arkansas, by no means suffices to explain a delay of five hours in the delivery of letters sent from Washington to New-York, we have the evidence before us constantly that private companies which cover the South and West with their agencies, and whose messengers penetrate beyond the clock-peddler and the colporteur, into the loneliest recesses of the newest States, can yet command the utmost velocity of communication in the least-frequented sections of the country. For the last ten days, for instance, the New-Orleans newspapers have been regularly delivered in this City, by the agents of the Adams Express Company, in advance of the mails, the distance between these two capitals of the North and South being traversed by these agents in from two to four days' less time than by the contractors of the National mails.

If this can be done in one instance, why not in all? If by one private company, why not by the National Government? If the present mail system is really unsusceptible of improvement, why should it not be frankly abandoned at once, and the business of transporting the correspondence of the country be handed over, under proper supervision by the Government to these proved and competent Express Companies?

The Steamer Anglo-Saxon.

Portland, Thursday, Dec. 8.

The steamship Anglo-Saxon, from Liverpool on the 24th ult., arrived here at 7½ o'clock this morning. She saw the Hungarian on the 1st inst. She was detained outside of Portland for thirty-two hours by fog and a snow-storm.

The Anglo-Saxon will sail from this port on Saturday, the 17th inst., for Liverpool. There will be no steamer from here on Saturday, the 10th instant.

From Hayti.

Soulouque's Property to be Sold—Popularity of the Government—Banks, Insurance Companies and Lotteries.

Files from Hayti to Nov. 12, are received by the arrival of the brig Ariel.

The Corps Legislatif have decreed the establishment of a Bank, with five millions capital and the privilege of increasing it, at Port-au-Prince, with branches at Cape Haytien, Cayes, Gonaives, Jeremie, Jacmel and Port-au-Paix. The Institution will be under Government control, the officers to be named by the President, and the loans to be made only to agriculturists, and others interested in the tillage of the soil, as it is especially for the benefit of this class that the charter has been granted.

By a Government decree all the confiscated property of the ex-Emperor Soulouque and his family, and of the ex Minister Delva, are to be publicly sold, and the receipts of the sale to be devoted towards reimbursing to the public treasury the immense sums extracted therefrom by Soulouque and Delva.

A special deputation has been sent by the President to the Provinces which suffered the most severely by the late storm, and material aid has been given to the unfortunate sufferers.

A decree has been issued to the effect that all public works, the expense of which shall exceed two millions of dollars, national money, shall be referred to the people at an election. The Government is authorized to undertake, without such formality, enterprises involving a less amount.

La Republique, of Nov. 10, expresses the greatest satisfaction with the existing Government, and says that it has instituted a good police and effected the reorganization of the tribunals and their freedom from corruption, and the extension of commerce.

Lotteries have been established with the permission of the Government. The drawing of "The Grand Lottery of Divine Providence" took place on the 3d November, at Jacmel, the 4 gregate value of the twenty prizes amounting to two thousand dollars. An Insurance company, with a capital of three millions dollars, had also been established under the same irreverent title of "The Divine Providence Insurance Company."

President Jeffrard was in good health, and nothing more was heard of the late rebellion, which was at last considered to be entirely quelled.

SOUTHERN MOVEMENTS.

Progress of the Southern States Towards Independence.

PROPOSITION TO BECOME THE VASSAL OF ENGLAND OR FRANCE—A STARTLING SCHEME.

From the Richmond Examiner.

Southwestern Virginia, Saturday, Dec. 3, 1859.

Mr. Editor: The people of this remote portion of the State participate fully with the rest of their fellow-citizens in their sentiments respecting the recent occurrences at Charlestown and Harper's Ferry. I have heard our most sober and conservative men declare that in their opinion the Union is virtually dissolved. All commend the promptitude of the President's action, and the patriotic vigilance and energy of Gov. Wise.

The invasion of Brown and his men was a sufficient outrage upon the South, even if it had been condemned by the entire Northern people; but the general sympathy and commendation he has elicited from the North make the case far the most serious one that has happened in the history of the Union. It is insult piled on injury. Instead of condemnation of this nefarious act, we hear only approval from the North; instead of regret, the most extravagant and defiant exultation. If the two sections had been contiguous nations, reposing in profound peace, and this invasion of Brown's had occurred, nothing but the sternest censure of the act by the North, and the severest punishment of its perpetrators, could have prevented a declaration of war; and can the idea be tolerated for a moment, that the fact of union is to furnish license and immunity for acts which would constitute a state of war between distinct nations?

This last act, however, and the sympathy and commendation it has so generally received at the North, only caps the climax of injury which the South has had to endure from that section for a long series of years. The Northern people have long since exhausted the vocabulary of insult in the language they have employed against us. Not content with the discharge of foul language and constant efforts to defame us before the world, they have resorted to every means their ingenuity could suggest for depriving us of our constitutional rights and injuring us in the enjoyment of our domestic property. They have abused the powers of legislation, they have employed the Press and the pulpit, they have perverted history, muddied the genial streams of literature, and exhausted all the resources of falsehood for our injury and defamation. And now, when actual war is levied, servile insurrection planned, murder, robbery and treason committed, and revolution proclaimed, the whole North clap their hands with delight and exultation—many of them going so far as to eulogize the leader of the invasion, who was but a common murderer and horse-thief, as a greater hero than Washington—as a Messiah only a little inferior to Jesus Christ. In what strong contrast with this diabolical invasion and rabid sympathy with Brown, was the incredulity of a Secretary of War from Virginia—the State which founded the Confederacy and now receives the first stab from its parricides—who, when informed that such an act was meditated, refused to believe it, because his own native loyalty and faith to the Union made him think such treachery impossible.

The question at length forces itself upon the reluctant South whether she can, from any considerations whatever, longer consent to be insulted and outraged by her partner in the Confederacy? Can she remain true to the Union when such loyalty requires her to be false to herself? One month's defamation by England or France of the other, such as that which the North has been for continuous years heaping upon the South, would produce a fierce and murderous war. Is there real peace and union for the South with a section whose whole language towards us is studied insult, and whose whole action, as a partner, is ingeniously contrived and habitually practiced wrong? Is not the honor of the South implicated in this question of Union? and can a nation afford the deliberate sacrifice of its honor? Many of her best citizens have been counseling delay until some overt act of aggression was committed by the North. Is not Brown's invasion—organized at the North, aided and abetted by leading men in every part of that section before the fact, and ratified and commended by the Northern people after the fact—as palpable an overt act as can ever be expected or committed?

It may be proper, however, to await a more formal judgment upon recent occurrences, from the Northern people, than they have already pronounced. If this opinion be acquiesced in, I suppose it is the universal sentiment of the South, that the verdict which the people of the hostile section shall render in the Presidential election of next year, shall be taken as deciding whether they approve Brown's overt act or not. For one I have little hope from that verdict. The politicians are intent upon the spoils of the Federal Government. The partiality of the Yankee for the dollar is proverbial; but none who have not witnessed it can conceive the frantic anxiety for the public dollar. In pursuit of this species of dollar, he regards all means as legitimate, and the foulest dishonesty as neither criminal nor reprehensible, provided it be not exposed.

Except those of our Southern States, our Federal Government is the most economically administered Government in the world; and, thanks to the principles of policy which have been engrafted upon our Federal statute-book by the Democratic Party, this policy cannot be damaged except by a change of the whole plan of our Federal legislation. Until high protective tariff, indiscriminate public land donations, extensive schemes of internal improvement, and a national banking system shall be revived—which can only be done through the agency of Congress, Anti-Democratic in both branches, and of an Anti-Democratic Executive—these Republican cormorants for public plunder will never cease their war upon the Democratic Party. The first year which shall witness an uncontrolled Anti-Democratic Administration of the Federal Government, will witness the sudden increase of expenditures two or three hundred per cent. The policy of the Democratic Party is shaped by the strict-construction economists of the South, who want no jobs, and whose constant effort is the reduction of expenditures. The policy of the Anti-Democratic Party of this country is shaped by the worst class of politicians at the North—men who pursue politics as a money-making profession, who regard all means legitimate in political warfare, and no dishonesty as criminal which secures to them a share of public plunder.

It is this class of corrupt politicians who excite the Northern people to constant acts of insult against the South, and who keeps the flames of the Abolition agitation constantly supplied with fuel. They make it their employment of life to engender among the people of that section a general sentiment of jealousy and hatred towards our people and institutions. They commenced this work of sectional crimination many years ago for purely political objects—for the purpose of driving the political party which was controlled by the economical politicians of the South from power, and dividing these latter statesmen of that control in Federal administration which they have so long exercised for ends of economy and integrity. These agitators have at length succeeded beyond their expectation. They have raised a storm among the Northern masses which they cannot allay, and which has hopelessly wrecked the Union. They have wrought up the Northern people—totally uninformed, or rather, most grievously misinformed on the whole subject of Slavery and Southern institutions—to a pitch of rampant fanaticism that can now be controlled by no restraints, moral or political. The voice of Conservatism is drowned in the roar of the Abolition lion. The Conservative class of the North is cowed, dumb and terror-stricken before the wild beast that strides over the land.

The whole North is crazed on this subject of Slavery. They have arrived at that state of frenzy which prevailed in France during the Revolution and Reign of Terror. They have lost the power to discriminate between right and wrong, between what is noble and what is base. They extol the most criminal and truculent acts as righteous in the sight of Heaven and worthy of all praise among men. They exalt the basest monsters in human shape into heroes and cherished agents of Heaven in the accomplishment of its work. Their most popular pulpits rival the Jacobin Clubs of Paris in the blasphemy and intolerance of their utterances. I see no other issue for this frenzy of fanaticism than the same which controlled France for ten years in darkness, terror and death. The invariable issue of frantic popular infatuation, engendered of gross popular delusion, is in blood. The frenzy of the French people was only quenched in rivers of blood; and the infatuation of our Northern enemies seeks the same wholesale sacrifice. Ralph Waldo Emerson—whose genius is of the sort that delights to grovel in cant and fanaticism—panegyrized Old Brown as an idealist—as the apostle of an idea, which, bringing him as a second Messiah to the scaffold, must eventuate in the emancipation of millions of bondmen. And what is this irrepressible idea thus impersonated in Brown? Why, it is the old Jacobin idea of the Parisian clubs, of the absolute equality of men—the very same idea whose realization was the grand desideratum sought during the Reign of Terror—the same identical Moloch to which one million of human beings were immolated in France. It was for this idea that the vilest monsters incarnate were elevated to rule in that unhappy country—that men, women and children were shot down by the hundreds at a time, arranged in long lines before the mouths of cannon; or drowned by boat-loads in deep rivers, bound up in sacks. It was for the establishment of this right of equality that the guillotine was erected, and a million of human beings deprived of the right to live. The frenzy of the Northern people is hurrying them into the same excess of intolerance. It seems to me impossible for any reflecting man to persuade himself that the preservation of Union is feasible with a section whose people are fanatically deaf to reason and all considerations of interest, and madly resolved, at every cost and sacrifice, to push an impracticable idea to an impossible accomplishment.

It would be worse than unwise for the South to delay longer the proper preparations for meeting the coming aggressions. It behooves her at once to put herself in an attitude of defence, alike from assault without and insurrection within. Each State should organize a public guard at its capital of five hundred or a thousand men, capable of being dispatched at a moment's warning to any point of danger in the interior.

At the same time each county should maintain in constant drill a band of fifty or a hundred minute men, to perform constant police duty within its bounds. The militia of each State should be strongly organized, and the officers of the regiments commissioned and non-commissioned, be required to undergo monthly drills, or

UNRIVALED LONDON GIN.
MORRIS'
WARRANTED GENUINE
OLD TOM.

The trade in London Gin between England and this country having seriously diminished of late years, I have found it necessary to come over and ascertain the causes, and must confess that I no longer wonder at it; for while some are manufacturing an absurd imitation here, and selling it as imported, others so swamp the genuine article with plain spirits, alcohol, &c., that it is impossible to recognize our old favorite in this new guise. In order to prevent this, I would send it over in sealed bottles, but that the United States prohibits the importation of foreign spirits in packages smaller than a puncheon. I have, therefore, taken a new store here in order to bottle and sell it genuine. I will only add that this is the best Gin made in London, and from its purity is fast superseding all other liquors. As a medicine, it stands unrivalled for its salutary effect on the kidneys, and other internal organs; while as a convivial liquor, its pure and delicate flavor has rendered it

TESTIMONIAL.
BOSTON, July 19, 1857.
MESSRS. J. BURNETT & CO.: I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair-Oil—(Cocoaine.)
For many months my hair has been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely. The skin upon my head became gradually more and moore inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain. This irritated condition I attributed to the use of various advertised hair washes, which I have since been told contain camphene spirit.
By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation; in three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared—the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair. I trust that others similarly afflicted, will be induced to try the same remedy. Yours very truly,
SUSAN R. POPE,
BURNETT'S COCOAINE.
A single application renders the hair (no matter how stiff and dry) soft and glossy for several days. It is conceded by all who have used it to be the best and cheapest Hair Dressing in the World.
Prepared by JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., Boston, and for sale by dealers generally at 50 cents a bottle.

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS.

A TRUTH.
"It is nothing to gain popularity, but it is rarely that men retain it. Like money, 'come easy, go easy,' popularity is a tender affair, and requires careful nursing to keep it alive. Especially is this observable in mercantile affairs. If the reputation, which is but another name for popularity, be won by actual merit, it is lasting. Mr. THOMAS R. AGNEW, the well-known importer, grocer, flour and tea-dealer, No. 260 Greenwich and 89 Murray-st., has by his straightforward course, the fairness of his prices,
and the excellence of his stock
secured a reputation which will be lasting.
With a capital of $50,000,
he can defy competition, and afford to sell, at either wholesale or retail, at prices to suit everybody. Give him a call and be satisfied with the truth of our assertions."—New-York Atlas.

PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—Dr. Hunter has for thirty years confined his attention to diseases of a certain class, in which he has treated not less than fifty thousand cases, without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without dieting or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours. It roots out the poisonous taint the blood is sure to absorb, unless this remedy is used. It is $1 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for nothing, that treats of the evil effects of early abuse and indulgence, is embellished with elaborate colored engravings, portraying every feature and phase of disease, exposes the fallacy of the ordinary modes adopted for the cure of local as well as hereditary maladies, and gives the only safe and infallible remedy for expunging every trace of the virus from the system.

DENTISTRY.

A CLEAN AND WHOLESOME APPEARANCE OF THE MOUTH IS THE STRONGEST LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION.—Pain and loss of teeth entirely prevented by my new method of filling, which is warranted. Teeth and fangs ingeniously removed without sensation. Old sets exchanged, fitted or repaired; and new sets in handsomest style. VINCENT W. BATE, Dentist, 835 Broadway, corner 13th-st.

SYMPATHY WITH THE SOUTH.

GREAT UNION DEMONSTRATION IN BOSTON.

Speech of Edward Everett.

LETTER FROM EX-PRESIDENT PIERCE.

BOSTON, Thursday, Dec. 8.

The Union meeting at Faneuil Hall to-day was presided over by ex-Gov. LINCOLN, assisted by 129 Vice-Presidents, including four ex-Governors of the State and six Secretaries. The principal business localities in the State were represented in the organization. The hall was packed in every part and many hundreds were unable to gain admittance. Rev. Mr. BLAGDEN, of the Old South Church, invoked the Divine blessing on the nation, the State and the audience assembled. The President—ex-Gov. LINCOLN—made the opening address, in which he briefly alluded to the event which seemed to call for the present demonstration.

Ten resolutions were then read, the third of which is as follows:

Resolved, That we look with indignation and abhorrence upon the recent invasion of the Commonwealth of Virginia; that however narrow or however comprehensive was the iniquitous scheme, in its instruments or its execution, it was an undisguised assault upon the peace and welfare of the whole country; that we deeply sympathize with the people of Virginia in the trying scenes which they have been called to pass through, and proffer them and their civil authorities, and those of the Federal Government, our unfailing countenance and support in the maintenance of the laws of the land and the public peace.

The sixth resolution reads:

Resolved, That the unchangeable Union of these States is indispensable to the prosperity and glory of each and of all, and even to our continued existence as a civilized and enlightened nation; and that in league with our patriotic brethren throughout the Union, we solemnly pledge ourselves to uphold it with our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.

The seventh resolution declares fealty to the Constitution, and that we will faithfully and unreservedly carry out all its obligations and requirements.

The eighth resolution declares that we will discountenance everything tending to produce alienation of feeling between the North and South.

The ninth resolution denounces the apologists for the late raid upon Virginia, and holds as guilty, before God and the country, those who induced it.

Hon. EDWARD EVERETT, who was hailed with every demonstration of respect and enthusiasm, was now introduced, and he spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. EDWARD EVERETT.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: In rising to address you on this important occasion, indulge me in a few words of personal explanation. I did not suppose that anything could occur which would make me think it my duty to appear again on this platform, on any occasion of a political character; and had this meeting been of a party nature or designed to promote any party purposes I should not have been here. When compelled, by the prostration of my health, five years ago, to resign the distinguished place which I then filled in the public service, it was with no expectation, no wish, and no intention of ever again mingling in the scenes of public life. I have, accordingly, with the partial restoration of my health, abstained from all participation in political action of any kind; partly because I have found a more congenial, and, as I venture to think, a more useful occupation in seeking to rally the affections of my countrymen North and South, to that great name and precious memory which is left almost alone of all the numerous kindly associations, which once bound the different sections of the couuntry together; and also because, between the extremes of opinion that have long distracted and now threaten to convulse the country, I find no middle ground of practical usefulness, on which a friend of moderate counsels can stand. I think I do a little good,—I try to,—in my waning years, in augmenting the funds of the charitable institutions,—commemorating from time to time the honored dead and the great events of past days, and chiefly in my humble efforts to rescue from desecration and the vicissitudes of private property the home and the grave of WASHINGTON. These, Sir, seem to me to be innocent and appropriate occupations for the decline of life. I am more than contented with the favor with which these, my humble labors, are regarded by the great majority of my countrymen; and knowing by experience how unsatisfying in the enjoyment are the brightest prizes of political ambition, I gladly resign the pursuit of them to younger men.

Sir, the North and the South, including the Northwest and Southwest, have become fiercely, bitterly arrayed against each other. There is no place left in public life for those who love them both. The war of words—of the Press, of the platform, of the State Legislatures, and, must I add, the pulpit?—has been pushed to a point of exasperation, which, on the slightest untoward accident, may rush to the bloody arbitrament of the sword. The great ancient master of political science (Aristotle) tells us, that though revolutions do not take place for small causes, they do from small causes. He means, sir, that when the minds of the community have become hopelessly embittered and exasperated by long-contidued irritation, the slightest occurrence will bring on the catastrophe.

In fact, it seems to me that we have reached a state of things which requires all good men and good patriots to forego for a time all mere party projects and calculations, and to abandon all ordinary political issues; which calls, in a word, upon all who love the country and cherish the Union, and desire the continuance of those blessings which we have till lately enjoyed under the Constitution transmitted to us by our Fathers, and which I regard as the noblest work of political wisdom ever achieved,—to meet as one man and take counsel for its preservation. It is this feeling that has brought me here to-day.

It will probably be said, Sir, that those who entertain views like these exaggerate the gravity of the crisis. I wish I could think so. But I fear it is not we who exaggerate, hut those who differ from us, that greatly—and soon, I fear it will be, fatally—underrate the ominous signs of the times. I fear, Sir, that they are greatly misled by the one-sided views exclusively presented by the party Press, and those who rely upon the party Press exclusively for their impressions, and that they are dangerously ignorant of the state of opinion and feeling in the other great section of the country. I greatly fear that the mass of the community, long accustomed to treat all alarm for the stability of the Union as groundless, all professed anxiety for its preservation as insincere, or, if sincere, the result of nervous timidity, have unfitted themselves to measure the extent and the urgency of the existing danger. It is my own deliberate conviction, formed from some opportunities of personal observation, and from friendly correspondence with other parts of the country (though I carry on none of a political nature), that we are on the very verge of a convulsion, which will shakee the Union to its foundation; and that a few more steps forward, in the direction in which affairs have moved for a few years past, will bring us to the catastrophe.

I have heard it urged on former occasions of public alarm, that it must be groundless, because business goes on as usual,—and the theatres are open, and stocks keep up. Sir, these appearances may all be delusive. The great social machine moves with a momentum that cannot be suddenly stopped. The ordinary operations of business went on in France, in the revolution of 1789, till the annihilation of the circulating medium put a stop to everythidg that required its use. The theatres and all the other places of public amusement were crowded to madness in the reign of terror. The French stocks never stood better than they did in Paris on the 21st of February, 1848. On the 24th of that month Louis PHILIPPE was flying in disguise from his capital; the Tuileries were sacked, and the oldest monarchy in Europe had ceased to exist.

I hold it to be time then, Sir, as I have said, for good men and good patriots, casting aside all mere party considerations, and postponing at least all ordinary political issues, to pause; to look steadily in the face the condition of things to which we are approaching; and to ask their own conscienees whether they can do nothing to avert the crisis, and bring about a happier and better state of things. I do not ask them to search the past for topics of reproach or recrimination on men or parties. We have had enough of that, and it has contributed materially to bring about our present perilous condition. In all countries where speech and the Press are free, especially those countries which by controlling natural causes fall into two great sections, each possessing independent local legislatures and centres of opinion and influence, there will in the lapse of time unavoidably be action and reaction of word and deed. Violence of speech or of act, on the one side, will unavoidably produce violence of speech and act on the other. Each new grievance is alternately cause and effect—and if, before resorting to healing counsels, we are determined to run over the dreary catalogue, to see who was earliest or who has been most to blame, we engage in a controversy in which there is no arbiter, and of which there can be no solution.

But without reviving the angry or sorrowful memories of the past, let me, in all friendliness, ask the question, what has either section to gain by a dissolution of the Union, with reference to that terrible question which threatens to destroy it. I ask patriotic men in both sections to run over in their minds the causes of complaint which they have, or think they have, in the existing state of things, and then ask themselves dispassionately, whether anything is to be gained, anything to be hoped, by pushing the present alienation to that fatal bourne from which, as from death, there is no return? Will the South gain any greater stability for her social system, any larger entrance into the vacant public Territories? Will the North have effected any one object, which to me, or any shade of opinion, extreme or moderate, is deemed desirable; on the contrary, will not every evil the desires to remedy be confirmed and aggravated? If this view of the subject be correct, what can be more unwise—what more suicidal—than to allow these deplorable dissensions to result in a revolution, which will leave two great sections of the country in a worse condition than it finds them with reference to the very objects for which they allow themselves to be impelled to the dreadful consummation.

But I shall be told, perhaps, that all this is imaginary; that the alarm at the South is fictitious, or, rather, a groundless panic, for which there is no substantial cause—fit subject for ridicule rather than serious anxiety. But I see no signs of panic in Virginia, except for a few hours at Harper's Ferry, when, in the confusion of the first surprise, and in profound ignorance of the extent of the danger, the community was for a short time paralyzed. I am not sure that a town of four or five hundred families in this region, invaded at midnight by a resolute band of twenty men, entering the houses of influential citizens, and hurrying them from their beds to a stronghold previously occupied, and there holding them as hostages—I am not sure, Sir, that an equal panic would not be created till the extent of the danger was measured. Besides, Sir, if the panic had been much more extensive than it was, the panics of great and brave communities are no trifles. BURKE said he could not frame an indictment against a whole people; it seems to me equally in bad taste at least to try to point a sneer at a State like Virginia. The French are reputed a gallant and warlike people; but the letters from the late of war tell us that even after the great victory of Solferino, a handful of Austrians, straggling into a village, put a corps of the French army—thousands strong—to flight. A hundred and fifty men overturned the French monarchy, on the occasion to which I have already alluded, in 1848. When the circumstances of the case are taken into consideration, I suspect it will be agreed that any other community in the country, similarly situated, would have been affected in the same way. A conflict of such an unprecedented character, in which twelve or fourteen persons on the two sides are shot down, in the course of a few hours, appears to me an event at which levity ought to stand rebuked, and a solemn chill to fall upon every right-thinking man.

I fear, Sir, from the tone of some the public of journals, that we have not made this case our own. Suppose a party of desperate, misguided men, under a resolved and fearless leader, had been organized in Virginia, to come and establish themselves by stealth in Springfield in this State, intending there, after possessing themselves at the unguarded hour of midnight of the National Armory, to take advantage of some local cause of disaffection, (which led to a very deplorable occurrence in this vicinity a few years ago,) to stir up a social revolution; that pikes and rifles to arm twenty-five hundred men had been procured by funds raised by extensive subscriptions throughout the South—that at the dead of a Sunday night, the work of destruction had begun, by shooting down an unarmed man, who had refused to join the invading force; that citizens of the first standing were seized and imprisoned,—three or four others killed: and when on the entire failure of the conspiracy, its leader had been tried,—ably defended by counsel from his own part of the country, convicted and executed, that throughout Virginia which sent him forth on his fatal errand, and the South generally, funeral bells should be tolled, meetings of sympathy held, as at the death of some great benefactor, and the person who had plotted to put a pike or a rifle in the hands of twenty-five hundred men, to be used against their fellows, inhabitants of the same town, inmates of the same houses; with an ulterior intention and purpose of wrapping the whole community in a civil war of the deadliest and bloodiest type in which a man's foes should be those of his own household; suppose, I say, that the person who planned and plotted this, and with his own hand or that of his associates acting by his command, had taken the lives of several fellow-beings should be extolled, cannonized, placed on a level with the great heroes of humanity, nay, assimilated to the Saviour of mankind; and all this not the effect of a solitary individual impulse, but the ripe fruit of a systematic agitation pursued in the South, unrebuked for years! What, Sir, should we feel, think, say under such a state of things? Should we weigh every phrase of indignant remonstrance with critical accuracy, and divide our murmurs with nice discrimination amono those whom we might believe, however unjustly, to be directly or indirectly concerned in the murderous aggression.

Mr. Chairman, those who look upon the existing excitement at the South as factitious or extravagant have, I fear, formed a very inadequate idea of the nature of such an attempt as that which was made at Harper's Ferry was intended to be, and would have been, had it proved successful. It is to want of reflection on this point that we must ascribe the fact that any civilized man, in his right mind, and still more any man of intelligence and moral discernment in other respects, can be found to approve and sympathize with it. I am sure, if such persons will bring home to their minds, in any distinct conception, the real nature of the undertaking, they would be themselves amazed that they had ever given it their sympathy. It appears, from his own statements and those of his deluded associates, of his biographer, of his wretched wife, that the unhappy man who has just paid the forfeit of his life had for years meditated a general insurrection in the Southern States; that he thought the time had now come to affect it; that the slaves were ready to rise, and the non-slaveholding whites to join them; and both united were ready to form a new Commonwealth, of which the Constitution was organized, and the officers chosen. With this wild, but thoroughly matured plan, he provides weapons for those on whose rising he calculated at Harper's Ferry; he seizes the national arsenal, where there was a supply of arms for a hundred thousand men, and he intended, if unable to maintain himself at once in the open country, to retreat to the mountains, and from their fastnesses, harrass, paralyze, and finally revolutionize the South. To talk of the pikes and rifles not being intended for offensive purposes is simply absurd. The first act almost of the party was to shoot down a free colored man, whom they were attempting to impress, and who fled from them. One might as well say that the rifled ordnance of LOUIS NAPOLEON was intended only for self-defence, to be used in case the Austrians should undertake to arrest his march.

No, Sir, it was an attempt to do on a vast scale what was done in St. Domingo in 1791, where the colored population was about equal to that of Virginia; and if any one would form a distinct idea what such an operation is, let him see it—not as a matter of vague conception—a crude project—in the mind of a heated fanatic, but as it should in the sober pages of history, that record the revolt in that island; the midnight burnings, the wholesale massacres, the merciless torture, the abominations not to be named by Christian lips in the hearing of Christian ears,—some of which, too unutterably atrocious for the English language, are of necessity veiled in the obscurity of the Latin tongue. Allow me to read you a few sentences from the historian of these events:

"In the town itself, the general belief for some time was, that the revolt was by no means an extensive one, but a sudden and partial insurrection only. The largest sugar plantation on the plain was that of Mons. GALLIFET, situated about eight miles from the town, the negroes belonging to which had always been treated with such kindness and liberality, and possessed so many advantages, that it became a proverbial expression among the lower white people, in speaking of any man's good fortune, to say, il est heureux comme un negre de Gallifet (he is as happy as one of M. GALLIFET'S negroes.) M. ODELUC, an attorney, or agent, for this plantation, was a member of the General Assembly, and being fully persuaded that the negroes belonging to it would remain firm in their obedience, determined to repair thither to encourage them in opposing the insurgents; to which end he desired the assistance of a few soldiers from the townguard, which was granted him. He proceeded accordingly, but on approaching the estate, to his surprise, he found all the negroes in arms on the side of the rebels, and, horrid to tell, their standard was the body of a white infant, which they had recently impaled on a stake! Mr. ODELUC had advanced too far to retreat undiscovered, and both he and a friend who had accompanied, him with most of the soldiers, were killed without mercy. Two or three only of the patrol escaped by flight, and conveyed the dreadful tidings to the inhabitants of the town.

By this time, all or most of the white persons who had been found on the several plantations, being massacred or forced to seek their safety in flight, the ruffians exchanged the sword for the torch. The buildings and cane-fields were everywhere set on fire; and the conflagrations, which were visible from the town, in a thousand different quarters, furnished a prospect more shocking, and reflections more dismal, than fancy can paint, or the powers of man describe."

Such, Sir, as a matter of history, is a servile insurrection. Now let us take a glance at the state of things in the Southern States, co-members as they are with us in the great Republican Confederacy. Let us consider over what sort of a population it is, that some persons among us think it only right and commendable, but in the highest degree heroic, saint-like, god-like, to extend the awful calamity, which turned St. Domingo into a heap of bloody ashes in 1791. There are between three and for millions of the colored race scattered through the Southern and Southwestern States, in small groups, in cities, towns, villages, and in larger bodies on isolated plantations; in the house, the factory, and the field; mingled together with the dominant race in the various pursuits of life; the latter amounting in the aggregate to eight or nine millions, if I rightly recollect the numbers. Upon this community, thus composed, it was the design of BROWN to let loose the hell-hounds of a servile insurrection, and to bring on a struggle which for magnitude, atrocity and horror would have stood alone in the history of the world. And these eight or nine millions, against whom this frightful war was levied, are our fellow-citizens, entitled with us to the protection of that compact of Government, which recognizes their relation to the colored race,—a compact which every sworn officer of the Union or of the States is bound by his oath to support! Among them, Sir, is a fair proportion of men and women of education and culture—of moral and religious lives and characters—virtuous fathers, mothers, sons, and daughters, persons who would adorn any station of society in any country—men who read the same Bible that we do, and in the name of the same master kneel at the throne of the same God—forming a class of men from which have gone forth some of the greatest and purest characters which adorn our history—WASHINGTON, JEFFERSON, MADISON, MONROE, MARSHALL. These are the men, the women, for whose bosoms pikes and rifles are manufactured in New-England, to be placed in the hands of an ignorant subject race, supposed, most wrongfully, as recent events have shown, to be waiting only for an opportunity to use them!

Sir, I have on three or four different occasions in early life and more recently, visited all the Southern and Southwestern States, with the exception of Arkansas and Alabama. I have enjoyed the hospitality of the city and the country; I have had the privilege before crowded and favoring audiences, to hold up the character of the father of his country, and to inculcate the blessings of the Union, in the same precise terms in which I have done it here at home, and in the other portions of the land. I have been admitted to the confidence of the domestic circle, and I have seen there touching manifestations of the kindest feelings by which that circle, in all its members, high and low, master and servant, can be bound together; and when I contemplate the horrors that would have ensued had the tragedy on which the curtain rose at Harper's Ferry, been acted out, through all its scenes of fire and sword, of lust and murder, of rapine and desolation, to the final catastrophe, I am filled with emotions to which no words can do justice. There could of course be but one result, and that well deserving the thoughtful meditation of those, if any such there be, who think that the welfare of the colored race could by any possibility be promoted by the success of such a movement, and who are willing to purchase that result by so costly a sacrifice. The colored population of St. Domingo amounted to but little short of a half a million, while the whites amounted to only 30,000. The white population of the Southern States alone, in the aggregate, outnumbers the colored race in the ratio of two to one; in the Union at large in the ratio of seven to one, and if (which Heaven avert) they should be brought into conflict, it could end only in the extirmation of the latter after scenes of woe for which language is too faint; and for which the liveliest fancy has no adequate images of horror.

Such being the case, some one may ask why does not the South fortify herself against the possible occurrence of such a catastrophe, by doing away with the one great source from which alone it can spring? This is a question easily asked, and I am not aware that it is our duty at the North to answer it; but it may be observed that great and radical changes in the framework of society, involving the relations of twelve millions of men, will not wait on the bidding of an impatient philanthropy. They can only be brought about in the lapse of time, by the steady operation of physical, economical, and moral causes. Have those, who rebuke the South for the continuance of Slavery, considered that neither the present generation nor the preceding one is responsible for its existence? The African Slave-trade was prohibited by Act of Congress fifty-one years ago, and many years earlier by the separate Southern States. The entire colored population, with the exception, perhaps, of a few hundreds surreptitiously introduced, is native to the soil. Their ancestors were conveyed from Africa in the ships of Old-England and New-England. They now number between three and four millions. Has any person, of any party or opinion, proposed, in sober earnest, a practical method of wholesale emancipation? I believe most persons, in all parts of the country, are of opinion, that free labor is steadily gaining ground. It would in my judgment, have already prevailed in the two northern tiers of the slaveholding States, had its advances not been unhappily retarded by the irritating agitations of the day. But has any person, whose opinion is entitled to the slightest respect, ever undertaken to sketch out the details of a plan for effecting the change at once, by any legislative measure that could be adopted? Consider only, I pray you, that it would be to ask the South to give up one thousand millions of property, which she holds by a title satisfactory to herself, as the first step. Then estimate the cost of an adequate outfit for the self-support of the emancipated millions; then reflect on the derangement of the entire industrial system of the South, and all the branches of commerce and manufactures that depend on its great staples; then the necessity of conferring equal political privileges on the emancipated race, who being free would be content with nothing less, if anything less were consistent with our political system; then the consequent organization of two great political parties on the basis of color, and the eternal feud which would rage between them; and finally the overflow into the free States of a vast multitune of needy and helpless emigrants, who, being excluded from many of them (and among others from Kansas) would prove doubly burdensome, where they are admitted. Should we, Sir, with all our sympathy for the colored race, give a very cordial reception to two or three hundred thousand destitute emancipated slaves? Does not every candid man see, that every one of these steps presents difficulties of the most formidable character—difficulties for which, as far as I know, no man and no party has proposed a solution. And is it, Sir, for the attainment of objects so manifestly impracticable, pursued, too, by the bloody pathways of treason and murder, that we will allow the stupendous evil which now threatens us, to come upon the country? Shall we permit this curiously compacted body politic, the nicest adjustment of human wisdom, to go to pieces? Will we blast this beautiful symmetric form; paralyze this powerful arm of public strength; smite with imbecility this great National Intellect? Where, Sir, O where, will be the flag of the United States! Where our rapidly increasing influence in the family of nations! Already they are rejoicing in our divisions. The last foreign journal which I have read, in commenting upon the event at Harper's Ferry, dwells upon it as something that "will compel us to keep the peace with the powers of Europe," and that means to take the law from them in our own international relations.

I meant to have spoken of the wreck of that magnificent and mutually beneficial commercial intercourse which now exists between the producing and manufacturing States,—on the hostile tariffs in time of peace and the habitually recurring border wars by which it will be annihilated. I meant to have said a word of the Navy of the United States, and the rich inheritance of its common glories. Shall we give up this? The memory of our Fathers—of those happy days when the men of the North and South stood together for the country, on hard-fought fields; when the South sent her WASHINGTON to Massachusetts, and New-England sent her GREENE to Carolina—is all this forgotten? "Is all the counsel that we two have shared;" all the joint labors to found this great Republic;—is this "all forgot?" and will we permit this last great experiment of Confederate Republicanism to become a proverb and a by-word to the nations? No, fellow-citizens, no. This glorious Union shall not perish. Precious legacy of our Fathers, it shall go down, honored and cherished, to our children. Generations unborn shall enjoy its privileges as we have done, and if we leave them poor in all besides we will transmit to them the boundless wealth of this blessing.

Mr. EVERETT was followed by Hon. CALEB CUSHING.

The following letter from EX-President FRANKLIN PIERCE was read:

CONCORD, N. H., Wednesday, Dec. 7, 1859.

GENTLEMEN: I am honored by the reception of your letter of the 3d inst., informing me that "it is proposed that citizens of Massachusetts, who honor and cherish the Union, who mean to maintain the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to carry out all its requirements and obligations, assemble in Faneuil Hall, on Thursday, the 8th day of December instant," and inviting me to be present on that occasion.

Twenty-five years ago one would have asked involuntarily, upon reading a letter like that before me, What are the dangers which threaten the Union? Where are the men who do not honor and cherish that Union? Who do not "mean to maintain the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to carry out all its requirements and obligations?" Could we not then, each for himself, have promptly answered,—the dangers, if they exist, are too remote, and the men too inconsiderable in numbers, and too wild and extravagant in the principles and purposes which they avow, to make them the cause of even serious consideration, much less of apprehension and disquietude.

How is it to-day? How is it to be to-morrow, when patriotic hearts will beat in unison in the old Cradle of Liberty, and patriotic lips will repeat the sentiments and doctrines which were enunciated there more than eighty years ago, while the men of Virginia were preparing their crude but trusty weapons, not especially to protect their own borders, which have now been ruthlessly invaded in violation of all law, human and divine, but to come to Massachusetts and mingle their blood with that of our fathers in defence of the common cause.

Undisputed requirements of the Constitution, affecting the rights, the security of life and property of the sons of Virginia's revolutionary men, are set at nought. Lessons inculcating disobedience to such requirements have been scattered broadcast in our community, and have borne their fruits, not merely in the exhibition of an insurrectionary spirit, but in an actual invasion of a sister State by an armed organization, the objects of which are not disguised. This is not all. The invasion, and the overt acts of treason and murder, are openly justified and applauded at large meetings of men and women in your midst.

This is a sad truth, but not disheartening. It may be well that circumstances have occurred to arouse us from our lethargy, and to compel us to open our eyes, as if from the delusion of a dream, to the nearness and magnitude of impending calamities. It is comparatively safe to look dangers in the face, and meet them on the advance, but fatal to be appalled by them.

I repeat that the aspect of affairs, dark as it confessedly is, still is not disheartening, because I believe there are in New-England, and throughout the Middle and Northwestern States, multitudes of conscientious and patriotic citizens, moved, it may be at this moment, by sentiments differing widely from those which will animate you to-morrow, but who, nevertheless, would not wilfully and deliberately shake a single column which sustains the fabric of our existing institutions,—multitudes who have been misled upon the question of duty and personal obligations, and who now, when they have practical illustration, drawn in blood, of the teachings to which they have listened, and to which they may have given their assent, will pause, long enough at least, to take counsel of intelligent reason.

You, upon the soil of Massachusetts, where the first blood of the Revolution was shed, and where WASHINGTON took command of the Army in one of the darkest periods in our country's history, cannot gaze listlessly upon the gathering clouds, and will not bow tamely before the coming storm. We may all have regarded with too much indifference the swelling tide of reckless fanaticism, but we are not too late to breast it now. If honest men, who really think the Union worth preserving, will stand forth in the majesty and strength of patriotism and law, and with united purpose and becoming energy, they can and will roll that tide back, to the dismay and discomfiture of all conspirators against the public peace, and the integrity of the sacred bond which holds us a united people.

I am glad to perceive that your meeting is to be composed of citizens of various parties. The high resolve and the solemn duty to which I have just adverted rise above the range of thoughts and motives which ordinarily connect themselves with political organization and party success. If we are true to ourselves—if we revere the memory or appreciate the services of our fathers—we shall forget, in the exigency of this crisis, that there is, or ever has been, such thing as party in the ordinary acceptation of the term. At all events, we will forget it, until, through our steady, united efforts, we see the authority of the Constitution vindicated, and the Union reposing securely upon its old foundations.

You are right in assuming that this is no time for hesitancy; no time for doubting, halting, half-way professions, or, indeed, for mere professions of any kind. It is a time for resolute purpose, to be followed by decisive, consistent action.

Shall the fundamental law of the land be obeyed, not with evasive reluctance, but in good fidelity? Have we the power to enforce obedience to it, and will we exercise that power? If so, then may we continue to enjoy the multiplied and multiplying blessings of the peerless inheritance which has been transmitted to us. If otherwise, fanaticism has not mistaken the significance of its emblem—the national flag with the "Union down." That has waved through three foreign wars, with the Union up—cheering the hearts of brave men, on sea and land, wherever its folds have unrolled in the smoke of battle! How many of our countrymen, as they have seen it floating from the mast-head, in a foreign port, or giving its ample sweep to the breeze over a Consular office, have proudly and exultingly exclaimed: "I am an American citizen, and there is the ensign which commands for me respect and security, wherever throughout the wide world I may roam, or wherever I may choose temporarily to dwell!" How one would shut his eyes, and cover his face in shame and sorrow, if he believed he were destined to see the day when that flag will float no more. And yet if agitators and conspirators can have their way, it must go down in darkness and blood. In a Republic like ours, law alone upholds it, and when that loses its power all human power to save is lost. If such overwhelming disaster to humanity is to overtake us, I, for one, will not try to peer through the darkness and blackness, or to foreknow the end.

Let us act calmly and deliberately, without passion and without acrimony. Let us take no hasty or narrow view of the causes which have produced the dangers we would meet, and if possible avert. It is not the recent invasion of Virginia which should awaken our strongest apprehension, but the teachings, still vehemently persisted in, from which it sprung, with the inevitable necessity which evolves the effect from the cause.

So, again, it is to be remembered that those who boldly approve and applaud the acts of treason and murder perpetrated within the limits of Virginia, are not the most dangerous enemies of the Constitution and the Union. Subtle, crafty men, who, passing by duties and obligations, habitually appeal to sectional prejudices and passions, by denouncing the institutions and people of the South, and thus inflame the Northern mind to the pitch of resistance to the clear provisions of the fundamental law,—who, under plausible pretexts, addressed to those prejudices and passions, pass local laws designed to evade Constitutional obligations, are really and truly, whether they believe it or not, the men who are hurrying us upon swift destruction.

Your reprobation of the ethical and political teachings which inspire this line of conduct will, I am sure, be pronounced in tones so earnest that no man can mistake their import. You will show, on your part, readiness to give to fellow-citizens of other States such just legislation by Congress as shall provide for the punishment, not only of actual invasion, but for the setting on foot of armed expeditions, and thus do what you may effectually to secure, by constitutional enactments, each State against violence from any other. I shall hope that your meeting will awaken a spirit which will lead Massachusetts and Virginia to grasp again reciprocally the hand of affectionate sympathy and support—of love and honor—as they did in 1776, when, as the elder and more powerful of the colonies, they made up the issue of blood against the power of an unjust Parliament. Why should it not be so? Is there any cause of alienation, on our part, which did not exist at the formation of the Government? When have the people of the South invaded our territory, slain our people, or conveyed away our property? Why should not the authority of New-Hampshire honor and cherish the authority of Mississippi? Are they not each sovereign, but yet are they not bound up together in the endearing bond of a common country? To establish upon a firm footing these relations between all the States, what is required but cordial, loyal, manly recognition and enforcement, in spirit and in act, of all the requirements of the compact entered into by the fathers who have passed to their reward? Can it be that there is, among any large portion of our people, North or South, settled purpose to accept the benefits, but deny the burdens of the Constitution? Have all sentiments of patriotism and honor perished together? If that time has come, or you discern its approach, then, indeed, should you, who desire to live under this Constitution, expounded by the august tribunal into whose charge our fathers gave its exposition, raise the voice of warning, and save, if it be possible, the voice of woe. But it has not come, and it is still in your power to say it shall not. There is no inevitable irresistible impulse hurrying it forward.

I deny, in the name of all that is most sacred and precious in our inheritance, that there is an element of "irrepressible conflict" between the Southern and Northern members of this confederation. The doctrine is as unsound and untrue as it is fearful. It is contradicted by the unbroken experience of the first fifty years of our history. It would have been the price of the loss of reputation for life, to have uttered it while the men who fought the battles of the Revolution, and framed the Constitution, were yet alive. No! It has not come, and with the blessing of God, upon the exertions of good and patriotic men, it will never be nearer.

I have faith in the power of your efforts, my fellow-citizens,—faith that your example, in this relation, will be followed, and your action imitated, not only in other parts of Massachusetts, but by citizens of other States, who appreciate the blessings which the Constitution has conferred upon them, and who, come what may, intend, on their native soil, and with their children around them, to claim its protection and uphold its authority. I have faith, above all, that the continued favor of the God of our fathers, who watched over our feeble political beginnings, who preserved us through the innumerable perils of the struggle for nationality, will yet make the wrath of man subservient to the peace and durability of this Union.

With thanks for your remembrance of me on this occasion, and regrets that it is impossible for me to meet you in Faneuil Hall, I am, gentlemen,

Very truly, your friend,

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

Hon. WM. APPLETON, and others.

Letters were also read from Ex-Gov. Morton, Ex-Gov. John H. Clifford, Prof. Felton, Hon. B. F. Butler, E. D. Beach, Judge Marston, B. F. Hallett, and numerous other prominent citizens of the State. As a public demonstration the meeting was one of the greatest that has ever occurred in New-England. The sentiments uttered by the speakers called forth repeated marks of approval from the immense audience. The resolutions were adopted, and the meet ing adjourned.

Personal.

Mr. SEWARD, according to the Post's correspondent, writing on the 24th ult., is taking a rapid tour through Belgium and Holland. He will return to Paris about the 10th of December, and sail in the Arago on the 13th. During the previous week he had been the guest of the Emperor and Empress, at Compeigne, a compliment which very naturally had made a sensation, not only in American, but even in French circles.

The Lord of Dalkeith and Lady Louisa Hamilton have been married recently.

THURSDAY, Dec. 8—P. M.

The official paper of the general Administration at Washington, states that the Export movement during the past fiscal year, ending June 30, 1859, according to the commercial and navigation returns in the Treasury Department, exceeded the Imports about eighteen millions dollars. This difference is rather in advance of the estimate which we presented in July last, based upon the official figures of nine months of the year, the last quarter being a mere estimate, except for the port of New-York. Our figure for the export of Cotton was $160,000,000, while the official turns out $161,434,923. The Constitution presents only the exact figures for the exports of domestic production, adding that the foreign articles reëxported are over $20,000,000, which probably includes the reëxport of Mexican Silver and other foreign specie. The particulars given are:

EXPORTS—In Ordinary Domestic Produce,		$278,342,060
American Gold, &c		57,502,300
Foreign Articles Reexported		20,000,000
Total		$355,844,385
IMPORTS—In round numbers		338,000,000
Difference favor United States		$17,844,385

The ordinary Dividend Produce is reported to be made up as follows:

Cotton	$161,434,923
Tobacco	21,074,038
Rice	2,207,148
Rosin, Turpentine, Tar, &c	3,695,474
Brown Sugar and Molasses	272,634
